WORRAL COMMUNITY NEWSPAPERS

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1998 - SECTION B

Forced consolidation is madness

Front Bill Gates by Exxon and Mobil merger mania moves ahead at a frenzied pace. Now the onslaught is really hitting home, though an effort to merge out of existence Union County municipalities in the name of economy. Small towns, or towns with less than 10 square miles, are the target.

With little fanfare, New Jersey Rep. Robert Costello for the state's high brows, has taken up the cause of consolidation by highlighting propellant Alvin Katcher's plan to eliminate. That's right, forced consolidation starting within five years.

Left Out

By Frank Capocce

Towns forced into this mandatory coupling would be Kenilworth, Mountainside, Berkeley Heights, Cliff, Cranford, Hillsdale, New Providence, Plainfield, Rahway, Roselle, Scotch Plains, Springfield, Summit and Westfield. They would be mandated to merge to meet a bare minimum of 50,000 population and at least 10 square miles.

In typical big fish eat the smallest of our fish, Westfield would be the first targeted out of existence. Surprisingly, Roselle Park is not included on the list. Maybe Roselle Park was tough enough to take them on by themselves and they knew it.

A radical approach? Impossible to implement? Don't be so sure. In addition to the Katcher scholarly bubble, newspaper columns around the state have taken on the manner of consolidation as a magical way to cut costs.

Even our legislators have jumped into the act, proposing financial incentives to municipalities to share or merge services. This idea needs to be distinguished from the efforts to relieve counties and municipalities from paying costs such as the prosecutor's office, which are, properly, state costs. Also, the admirable effort of negotiating shared services by communities should continue.

The need for economy in government is something every taxpayer, including me, supports. But the "so called" high cost of redundancy — i.e., too many chiefs, administrators, etc. — is overplayed. People vote with their feet and pocket books as well as by voting machines.

There is such a thing called quality of life. We pack our residence based on tradition, needs and just what we plain like. It is the tradition which fosters the efforts of the Roselle Park volunteer fire department, junior women's club in Westfield and the thousands of other efforts people make every day for the communities they love. It is a tradition that would be severely damaged by consolidation.

Another thing about "so called" See DON'T, Page B2

Will Union County get New York's garbage too?

UCUA chair says likelihood is remote

By Sean Daily Staff Writer

Union County is stuck between the horns of a dilemma.

The towns in Essex and Newark, where New York City is proposing to send almost 6,000 tons of its garbage per day.

This is part of a plan, unveiled by New York City Mayor Rudolph Giuliani on Dec. 2, to close the Fresh Kills landfill by Dec. 31, 2001. New York City ships a total of 13,000 tons of garbage per day to Fresh Kills, the largest landfill on Earth.

The closing of Fresh Kills is nothing new, it was announced by Giuliani and New York Gov. George Pataki as far back as May 1996.

The plan, announced on Dec. 2, though, has some New Jersey politicians hopping mad, including Gov. Christine Whitman.

The proposal being promoted by the city of New York is a direct assault on the beaches of New Jersey and a heavy reminder to the quality of life, especially the residents of Hudson, Union, Essex and Middlesex counties, she said.

The mayor of Newark and Carteret could not be reached for comment.

Essex County Freeholder President Joseph DiVincenzi said he couldn't comment about the facilities.

This Carteret site is one of two sites proposed to handle New York's garbage

The freeholders don't have a position, he said. "We don't have any information on it."

He did say that "I can't see the freeholder board approving any facility if it results in economic or environmental harm to Essex County or Newark."

Union County Freeholder Donald Goncalves said these garbage barges may be a "Trojan horse," hiding plans to use a proposed Union County-Summit Island rail bridge to haul garbage into New Jersey.

The freeholders once supported this bridge, but unanimously voted to withdraw their support from it after the Port Authority pumped $22 million into the project, supposedly without the freeholders' knowledge.

"I was pleased with the swift opposition of New Jersey officials to the barge-transfer plan," he said. "I have my suspicions that the mayor of New York is using the Port Authority as a facilitator, looking to establish a garbage rail express. The answer will still be the same, No."

It is important to note that this plan is only in the planning stages, according to Giuliani's spokesperson, Jennifer Chali.

No contracts have been signed yet and Chali did not know when construction on the facilities would begin or end. However, she said, the negotiation process started with the Dec. 2 announcement.

This is the beginning of the process, she said. "We are beginning the process."

New York City plans to close Fresh Kills and ship its garbage out of state through five facilities.

Two of these sites are in Carteret and Newark. They will unload barges carrying garbage from Manhattan and Queens.

The Carteret site, to be run by USA Waste, will unload 600 tons of Manhattan trash and 3,000 tons of Queens trash daily. This trash will then be put in containers, loaded onto barges and be carried via the Erie Barge to waste disposal sites in Virginia.

The Newark site, run by Eastern Environmental, will unload trash solely from Manhattan — 2,000 tons worth. This trash will be loaded onto barges and taken to a waste disposal system in New Jersey and Virginia.

According to Lungs Kennedy, chairman of the Union County Utilities Authority Board of Commissioners, the trash will end up in the UCUA incinerator in Rahway.

"It's running for the full capacity," he said. "In fact, know the two facilities are running at capacity."

This is not to say that the incinerator couldn't expand its capacity.

Right now, it has a total of three burners. There is room in the incinerator, though, for a fourth burner. The extra burner would allow the incinerator to burn more trash.

However, Kennedy said the UCUA See UNION, Page B2

Bassano denies departure

By Tom Caravan Editor in Chief

Every few years, word begins to spread that Sen. C. Louis Bassano will be leaving his Senate seat for greener pastures — a position, in some fashion, with the state.

Each time, Bassano has denied those rumors and remained senator for the 21st Legislative District, which includes Union, Kenilworth, Roselle Park, Springfield and Summit in Union County, as well as several communities in Essex County. This week, those same rumors have been circulating the political circles, and just as he has done in the past, Bassano is saying he's staying where he is.

"I'm not being offered anything," Bassano said Monday. "There are people deliberately stirring this issue."

Bassano said the rumors first surfaced in 1993, when he discussed a position with the chief of staff under Gov. Jim Florio.

"I had an interest in one thing a while back and it never materialized. We've been moving forward the way we normally would, meaning that I'm running my office, doing politics and taking care of my constituents' needs," he said.

Gene Herman, a spokesman for Gov. Christine Whitman's press office, seemed confused when called

C. Louis Bassano

Eric Munoz

Monday because he did not know which appointment the newspaper was referring to regarding Bassano. Herman said that while he can only discuss appointments already made by the governor, he did not know which one even included Bassano. "I have nothing to report," Herman said.

In 1993, the rumor was that Bassano would take a position with the Casino Control Commission. In 1997, an election year, the rumor was that Essex County Executive James Trafletti was interested in Bassano's Senate seat and would perhaps force a primary battle, and this year, while there will be no run for the Senate seat in 1999, word has been circulating that Bassano is expected to take a state position, give up his Senate seat, and that people are already jockeying for the position, even if that includes a reorganization of the Senate and Assembly seats in district 21.

Bassano, from Union County, holds the Senate seat, while the Assembly seats are occupied by Kevin O'Keefe and Joel Weyenberg, two representatives whose bases are in Essex County. When the state undergoes redistricting and the new 21st district was assembled at the beginning of the decade, the structure agreed upon by Union County Republican Chairman Frank McDermott and then-Essex County Republican Chairman John Renna was that the senator would hail from Union County, and the two Assembly members would hail from Essex County.

So it should be no surprise that as the political grapevine grows, as Union County politician's name would surface, as Bassano's potential replacement.

Acquisition of Conrail eyed for business push

By Phillip Sean Curran Staff Writer

The acquisition of Conrail by two railroads will increase competition in the area and expand potential for businesses to reach other parts of the country, executives from both railroads said last week.

They spoke on Friday morning to an audience of other executives and politicians at a breakfast hosted by the Union County Chamber of Commerce.

CSX and Norfolk Southern together bought Conrail and agreed to split the two lines that run into New York and Pennsylvania. Norfolk Southern took the two lines that run into Pennsylvania, CSX the two lines going into New York state, Toledo, Ohio and Chicago.

The takeover of operations should take effect in spring.

Businesses should see immediate benefits. Under the old system, Conrail concentrated only on east to west railroad transportation. But under the new one, businesses here can use the Conrail lines to go south, too.

The addition of two railroads will be competing for the containers that come off the ships that come into Port Newark, part of which is in Elizabeth.

A member of the House Transportation Committee, Rep. Bob Franks, R-N.J., also spoke on the importance of focusing on the port and taking advantage of it. The way Union County uses the railroad will have far-reaching effects.

"Our ability to move people and products efficiently and safely will drive our job growth rate over the next decade," the Republican said.

He firmly supported the concept of using freight rail. "It cuts down on the number of trucks on the road, which means less congestion on the roads and less air pollution."

There is enormous potential for our area to use freight rail," Franks said. "Rail freight is a more sustainable mode of transportation than trucks."

Businesses in the county realize the significance of railroad transportation. Don Cramer, member said. Many of the trucks were represented at the breakfast on Friday. Chazz Cotney of the Chamber said.

"You can tell from the participation that important the issue is," the chairman of the chamber said. "The importance of the railroad in Union County is of utmost importance."

Local freight rail has all but disappeared. About 40-50% ago, the two major railroads, State Island Rail and Rahway Valley Railroad, left. Efforts to bring back local freight rail have taken place in recent months.

On Monday, County Manager Michael J. Lapelle met with Port Authority officials, who are anxious to proper talks with the county about a project to link Staten Island, N.Y. and Elizabeth. County officials envisioned a freight rail link as a way to stimulate economic growth. Towns such as Cranford, Elizabeth and Roselle would have greatly benefited by such an arrangement.

For all involved, it's wait and see for seat

(Continued from Page B1) mentioned frequently by political insiders who have had their own "heard" similar discussion. Another name to surface was O'Toole for the Senate, with Summit Councilman Eric Munoz as a potential candidate for the Assembly seat vacated by O'Toole if he were chosen by the Republican Committee.

Despite saying he has not received any offers, Bastiano continued to speak frankly when asked his opinion about the future of the district 24 Senate seat.

Quite simply, he said it was difficult upon that the senator should be from Union County, and that is the way it should remain.

If I got hit by a car yesterday and there was an opening in the Senate, the seat should go to Union County. I would like to see the death of an assemblyman and since because of a retirement — the seats in the Assembly became available and they went to representatives from Essex.

Some even think words are spreading.

Linda DiGiovanni

about Bastiano not because of a potential battle between Rep. Bob Franks and Senate President Donald DiFrancesco after the governor's seat held by him from Union County.

I don't know how either Frank or DiFrancesco want from this man.

Bastiano said. I don't think either is out there hanging the bushes for a replacement for the Tim or an awkward position because of my friend with both of them.

DiGiovanni works for Franks' congressional office in Union.

I heard the rumor that Lou is leaving," said DiGiovanni, who served one term with the Union County Board of Chosen Freeholders.

When asked if he would consider the Senate seat as has been discussed, she said, "I wouldn't even discuss that until he made the decision to leave the Senate. He is the sitting senator, and I have no reason to think that he is going to leave."

DiGiovanni said she doesn't know why the rumor is surfacing once again. "People have heard something about," she said. "As far as the Senate Assembly agreement between the two counties, she said the decision should be made between the chairman of the Essex and Essex Republican Committees."

Reina, who died earlier this year was not re-elected chairman of the Essex County Republican Committee two years ago. After his successor, Jeanne Parke, resigned, the committee elected O'Toole as its chairman. O'Toole has been serving in that capacity as well as a member of the Assembly.

Would he be interested in the Senate seat? As Essex County Republican chairman, would he be the person to negotiate the seats with McDermott?

O'Toole could not be reached for comment at presstime.

If the Senate seat went to an Essex County representative, more than likely the vacant Assembly seat would be given to a Union County representative.

Munoz, a member of the Summit Common Council, also said he had heard Bastiano was the leaving and acknowledged that he had heard his name mentioned as a possible candidate for the Assembly seat.

"I'll confirm that when people discuss representation, my name is mentioned as a possible Assembly candidate," Munoz said Monday. "However, at this time, I am not in deliberations, and I am not in contact with anyone about it."

Munoz declined to reveal how much he had heard about the matter, except to say, "It's not absolutely new, frankly. I have not tried to confirm it, and I haven't been aggressive about finding out," he said.

Don't force us to consolidate our towns

(Continued from Page B1) and Odeon Martin Systems, which is leasing the memoranda, have already decided that adding a fourth tier would not be economically feasible. According to the Department of Environmental Protection, the rate of these unlanded loads rises initially in the hands of the county governments.

Frank Capone of the DEP's Division of Solid and Hazardous Waste did not have any information on what the facilities would be like.

"I don't think we were given any details about this," she said.

Kulka did know what would happen if the facilities are designed as transfer stations — collection points for garbage.

The DEP's Solid Waste Committee spent weeks last week recommending an ordinance in each county's local waste disposal plans which the free riders would have to improve. The ordinance was then reviewed and approved by the state's process that takes three months to a year.

After that, the contractor at each site would apply for permits with the DEP. Approval would take six months to two years, after which construction could begin.

"For now, it appears the county and municipal officials will have to decide on this first," said Whittam's spokesperson Wendy Patella, "and they have been pretty clear that they don't want this facility, that this is a closed issue and that it won't reach the governor's office."

Union County in middle of trash dilemma

(Continued from Page B1) redundancy. Most of us either know personally or can readily reach out to our mayors, fire chiefs and public works officials if we have a problem. Our children's teachers, who more times than not are local friends, also are readily accessible. I am willing to pay for the privilege of redundancy and quality work.

I am not at all convinced that these free economies through consolidation. I do believe it will foster more power and control in the hands of non-elected bureaucrats and administrators. Big is not necessarily better.

Throughout the state I have had the privilege of watching scores of municipal officials at work. The overwhelming majority work long hours in the selfless task of balancing funding and quality of life problems in communities they care about. They are generous and give us our best. I am sure they will find new ways to do things and everything will be better.

The review of the municipal service we need and desire will always be continuous. We should listen and evaluate sharing of services and better ways to build the mosaic. I am reminded of Edward G. Robinson in the movie "Double Indemnity," when he says, "They got you and you are going to have to pay." Not a pleasant thought, but still a better approach than the madness of forced consolidation.

Frank Capone, an attorney, is a resident of Cranford.

Hillside teacher dreams of 'tapping' into success

By Jacquie McCarthy
Associate Editor

Anthony Giordano is a dreamer — and a writer. By day, an English teacher at Hillside High School, Giordano has made some extracurricular dreams come true — his first play, "Drama Club," written specifically for a high school stage, was published by Samuel French catalog company, and he has had several poems published. Another dream came true for Giordano this October, when his most recent playwrighting effort, "Tap Dreams," was produced on a New York stage.

Trained as a tap dancer, Giordano said that, ironically, tap dancing was not the inspiration for this play. "It doesn't really have anything to do with tap dance," Giordano said. "My family came expecting a musical, and there's no music," he added, chuckling.

"I wanted to write a play about women," Giordano said. "I've done a lot of local theater, and there are hardly any parts for women, especially women above the age of 30."

Familiar with the tap scene, Giordano decided to set the play in the women's dressing room of a tap class. "Unlike the New York classes, where it's professional people and the ages would vary tremendously," she playwright said, "in New Jersey, it would be mostly women about 45-55 years old."

Giordano felt a unisex play would be more suitable for a local theater group. "I never changes, so a local theater can afford to do the play. They can't afford to do plays that have 17 sets," he said.

The concept of "Tap Dreams" afforded the playwright much fodder for dialogue.

"There's a lot of conversation going on. There are no men in the play, except for one offstage voice of the dance teacher."

Each character has a dream related to tap class. One woman wants to lose weight, another is starstruck, recently relocated from Arkansas. Another character, a nun and teacher, learns tap to help director's school show. Last ly, a former dancer who whose marriage and family over her career, goes back to dance class to sort out her feelings.

"And their lives collide, they all intersect by the end of the play," Giordano said. "Nobody gets to be a famous dancer in the play. They still can't dance any better by the end of the season than they did before," he added, laughing.

"The problem of course is how do you have any action if no one can go any place, either, than that dressing room? The action has to happen after or before the scene, mostly," Giordano said. "The action of the play is the interaction of the people."

After writing "Tap Dreams" last year, Giordano submitted the script to theaters. Some "time passed."

"I had not given the letter yet saying that they were doing the show, and one day the director called me up," Diana LeBlanc of Love Creek Productions in New York City called to ask if she could make changes to the script. "I said, 'Who are you? What do you mean? Where are you?'" she said. "I said, 'Like in New York City.' Do whatever you want. I don't care."

"My theory of theater is that the director is the most important person," Giordano said, "so even as an actor, I will always do what the director says, even if I disagree with him. As a writer, I just give them my idea, and what they do with it is their business. I think my words should stand by themselves."

According to Giordano, a script can only stand by itself after public readings and many revisions.

"It's a phenomenal process, and anybody who writes plays should definitely do it. There's nothing that could take its place. You make mistakes in your play, and you don't know, you've made mistakes."

For example, Giordano discovered a mistake while attending a rehearsal of a scene in which a woman who has missed a class is reviewing the time-sheet.

"They begged me, and I said, 'OK, I'll do it.' I had the script in my hand, and said, 'Ok, it says here... that's not right!'" Giordano laughed heartily. "That's not the line, step-I said."

"Who wrote this? This is all wrong!" The first time that I did a public reading, I did it because the group told me I had to do it, and I went with the idea that these people are never telling me anything that I don't know about my own play. After five minutes, I realized how wrong I was and how important it was. They told me things that were so obvious that I said, 'How could I have missed that?'"

Giordano said, actually watching the play being performed was even harder than hearing it read.

"Having been an actor, I knew when they were making a mistake and I knew when they were lost. I went all the lights, but I couldn't sit in the audience. I had to sit in the back and not watch them, because then I could pretend they were just pausing and not perturbed that they missed a line," Giordano said.

"Also, I don't necessarily know what order the lines come to now because I wrote it a while ago. You'd think you'd remember every line, but I don't. There were a couple of nights where I thought they were totally missing everything but they were right, and I was wrong," the playwright laughed. "It was a good thing I wasn't prompting them."

However difficult, watching the play was just as educational as hearing the play.

"Some things that I thought were very obvious, they didn't laugh at," Giordano said.

"Tap Dreams" is now the only drama Giordano is hoping will come true. He spent the summer writing his second screenplay.

"I loved writing screenplays, because I was not limited to a set," Giordano said. "I can just say, they're in New York now! They can be any age, they can grow up. In a play, it's hard to have six actors play the same guy, but in the movie, you can have more actors with no trouble, you can have different sets, they can have a

Local students participate in 'Nutcracker Sweet' ballet

Sheneak McCoy of Hillside and Terri James of Irvington will be performing in a 15-city tour throughout New Jersey of the "Nutcracker Sweet" as members of the Youth Company of the School of the Garden State Ballet.

The 65-member troupe is comprised of advanced students from the school's branches in Morristown, Newark and Rutherford. The youthful dance company is directed by Jody Jaron of North Bergen, who also serves as director of the non-profit school.

The program features dance highlights from the popular Tchaikovsky "Christmas Ballet." Performances of the holiday season program will be presented before the students' audiences in regional elementary schools, and for the general public at the Trump Taj Majal, Rutherford Holiday Festival and at the Williams Center on First Night.

After the Nutcracker tour, the Youth Ballet Company will begin rehearsal for a spring performance tour at regional schools and senior centers in a new spring program featuring popular dance works.

Cranford Dramatic Club presents 'Snow White,' Western-style

The phrase, "Oo west, young man," takes on new meaning at the Cranford Dramatic Club, as dwarfs, an evil queen, a witch and a handsome prince seek their fortune in "Snow White Goes West," which runs through Dec. 13.

This perfectly charming adaptation of the fairy tale is presented in a humorous and heartwarming manner, by a talented cast, who has just as much fun as the audience. Narrator Peggy E. Seymour is right neighborly as she tells the tale of a beautiful young girl and her father, who strike gold in them, that hills only to be snookered out of it by Queenie, an evil, vain saloon owner, who marries Mr. White just before he kicks off. When beautiful stepdaughter Snow proves competition for the attention of Marshall Ho Prince — well now, you've heard tell of this before.

The CDC's annual children's production once again proves fine entertainment for children of all ages. Audience reaction to all characters was adorably genuine. The antics of

The seven Dwarf Brothers garnered many hoos and hollers, especially Shouty, played in good fun by Karl Schlenker. Howard Krebs elicited much giggling as Mr. White and Sneaky Sam. Mary Brunice Webb was properly razed as Queenie.

Fresh from CDC's romantic comedy "She Loves Me," Jean McAulroy and Rich Sibello team up again as Snow White and her Prince. Both have wonderful voices. McAulroy pirouetted such an endearing Snow White that many-pint-sized fans waited for the stage door for a glimpse of her after the show. Sibello, whose portrayal of the Coward in CDC's children's production of "Jack and the Beanstalk" was nothing short of hilarious, puts much personality into Marshall Prince, while strutting around in a top to which it causes a glare.

Musical numbers will knock you boots off from the Dwarf Brothers' singing about a hard-day digging in the mine to Quoshe declaring that an apple a day keeps the medicine man away. Choreography is laudable from well-timed romps through the audience to the Dwarf's soft shoe and chorus line numbers. Set design is efficacious, with unfolding flats alternating between the Dwarf's house and Queenie's Crystal Palace, which sports a magic mirror surrounded by magical twinkling lights.

CDC has struck gold with this and other children's productions, comparable to any professional troupe. So, if you want your kids to leave the theater screaming — with laughter, get on over to "Snow White Goes West" and stake your claim to some fine entertainment.

CDC is located at 78 Winans Ave., Cranford. For information, call (908) 276-7611.

'Psycho' remake, qu'est que c'est?

As any first year film student will tell you, Alfred Hitchcock's "Psycho" is one of the best-known and most studied films of all time, which brings up the obvious question that every movie buff in America has been asking since the news started to spread that a remake of this classic was in the works. "Why?" My personal suspicion is that like Sir Edmund Hillary, Director Gus Van Sant decided to climb that mountain "because it's there." Therein lies the one fatal flaw in this "Psycho" for a new generation: it is nearly impossible to separate this film from the original in the collective film consciousness, and let it stand on its own merits.

For the two of those of you out there that have either been in a coma or a cave for the past 38 years, the movie begins with the most involved red herring in film history, the theft of $400,000 from a real estate office. Anne Hecche plays Marian Crane, the aforementioned thief. Hecche's interpretation of Marian Crane is surprisingly Janet Leigh's. Her steadily moaning guilt and fear of discovery as she tries to bring the loot to her boyfriend are palpable.

It is a dark and stormy night that causes Marian to seek shelter at the Bates' motel, a quiet, off-the-beaten path kind of place that is to die for. It is here that the focus shifts from Marian to Norman Bates. Vince Vaughn's vision of Norman is dark and edgy. Unlike Anthony Perkins, who seemed to radiate the naive charm of a boy trapped in a man's body, Vaughn applies a more polished and calculating veneer, one that still allows the cracks to surface. Unfortunately, Vaughn towers over his counterpart and has a highly athletic muscular build, which he is completely comfortable in, both of which add up to the fact that he is too physically intimidating to convince the audience that he is a meek, sexually repressed mama's boy.

Strong performances are given throughout by Viggo Mortensen, Julianne Moore and William H. Macy, all of whom find depth in characters that could have easily overshadowed. For example, Sam, Marian's boyfriend, originally played by John Gavin, was merely a figural device. Now, as played by Viggo, he's an aspiring Marlboro man complete with sideburns and Western accent. His flirtations with Lita do not come across as heartless; rather, he is drawn to her out of the opinions of recent events.

Fade In

By Mike Ream

Where Marian's sister, Lita, as portrayed by Vera Miller, was a port of Marian herself, Moore's Lita is a 90s post-feminist woman, all stress and neurosis, but far from helpless; even to the point of giving Norman a well-placed boot to the face. William H. Macy brings credibility to Martin Balsam's role of Arbogast, the tenacious but likeable private investigator.

The film is nearly shot-for-shot and word-for-word from the original. Obviously intended to be a homage to the great director, Gus Van Sant shows us just what made Hitchcock the master of suspense. However, there are two scenes that detract significantly from the original: the first being a scene where Norman pleases himself while looking through a peephole, to watch Marian undress for her shower. Obviously that type of subject matter was beyond taboo in 1960, but given today's public general understanding of the relationship between sex and violence, the scene becomes disturbingly natural.

The other, surprisingly enough, is the infamous "shower scene." Considered excessive in its day, when viewed through the filter of countless Jason, Freddie, and Michael Myers films, it's become nearly urtic. The challenge here was to keep to Hitchcock's vision and yet terrify a modern audience. The result in some ways surpasses the original. In the original, the multiple camera work angles give a piecemeal look from several different takes; now we get the impression of several points of view simultaneously. By simply adding the sound of the knife going into the body, it rehumanizes the suffering. Van Sant does end up pulling the moment by inserting random images into this and the other murder scene ala "Natural Born Killers" as a way to show the chaos that is Norman's mind.

Going back to the question of why remake a film that is considered a masterpiece, and if you're going to ask why doing it exactly the same way it was done before, maybe Norman Bates had the right answer when he says, "Sometimes we all go just a little bit mad."

Some insights into the seen and unseen

I was recently at the Met in New York City viewing the Unicorn tapestries, which were temporarily put on display there while their permanent home at the Cloisters is renovated when the perhaps mundane thought occurred to me that great art can be found almost by accident. Its impact upon me is almost never planned. I had not even gone to the Met to view the tapestries. In fact, I didn't even know they had been moved there, but after a pleasant hour in the new Korean rooms, I wandered into hours of overwhelming happiness with my proximity to the familiar tapestries hung eye level in a small, intimate surroundings. More profound art has never been accomplished, and I dare say the Met may not even have understood the personal impact when they temporarily hung the tapestries in such available environs.

As President Clinton has learned through his own fall, I hadn't to add, recent Nobel Prize-winning author, Jose Saramago is correct when he writes in "The History of the Siege of Lisbon" that "Nobody likes people

On The Arts

By Jon Plaut

peering over the wall of his back yard," but sometimes opening oneself up to that peering over can produce an experience that touches others. While the result may not always be profound, as in the case of the Unicorn tapestries hastily hung where they were so available at the Met, sometimes the exhilarating artistic encounter comes quite by unplanned and unexpected opportunity to peer into the soul.

I never expect much or anything for that matter of Oprah Winfrey. I detest the gibbous and pop-keyhole psychology of her talk show, but in the movie "Beloved" she captures an uncommon fashion for the tough loneliness and humanity of the black experience from Nobel Prize-winning author Toni Morrison's treatment of the heritage of slavery. Speaking of the black experience and movie art found in unexpected places, do not fall in love Mark Levin's "Slam" about a black poet in and out of jail in Washington, D.C. using his hip rhyme to illuminate. Not since the one-hour of Ericsson Traffans' "Show the Plans Players" have I experienced the use of street poetry to focus on the black, urban personal life and struggle, not usually available to us behind the clouded walls of the stereotype we construct for our own convenience.

To return to President Clinton's not-so-private life, author Arthur Miller said in the Oct. 15 New York Times that the hysterical invasion of private life Miller wrote about in the play "The Crucible" might be happening again, as it did in the McCarthy era, except that the public does not seem to buy into the invasion of privacy with the same spirit shown by the media. Ruby Hunkley was able to open up for our understanding the bullying mother of Gypsy Rose Loe and Baby Jane Haver on the PaperMill production of "Gypsy" that seemed to step past the actual lives to make understandable, where we might otherwise simply decry it as the yearnings and missteps of the aggressive and ambitious mother.

For art strange that while we try to digest sexual events in Washington, our popular materials delineate what is acceptable in art by tuning up barriers to offer seeing a new film version of "Lolita" expressly dealing with child obsession? And while writer Joe Kline in "Whomby Culture" has caught the trailer-camp mentality and criticized our falling President, it will be left to others with history's perspective, perhaps to peer into Mr. Clinton's "whomby" and repulsive personality. Shakespeare would have had a creative ball peening over the wall and into the public and private persona driven by great events and destiny, and adolescent boys in the combination Henry IV and Lear with the Lady Macbeth.

scene that lasts 30 seconds. After the plays, this is a lot easier," he added. Luck is with Giordano at the moment, as two Hollywood agents are considering his screenplay for production. "I'll go home every day and hope that Hollywood has called. I keep hoping every day when I look in the mail," he said, "comparing that his chances would be better if he were in California in person."

While he waits for Hollywood to call, Giordano will continue teaching in Hillside, his full-time job for 13 years. He will continue to teach tap dance to fellow faculty members, and he will continue to write — and dream — for matter what.

By Jacque McCaslin, Associate Editor For the typical New Jersey native, diners are a safe haven: a casual, comfortable place to grab a bite, meet with friends or have a complete dinner from soup to dessert. Besides providing an accessible, familiar dining experience, Broadway Diner in Summit offers something a little different — an homage to the bright lights of the Big Apple. Located on River Road, off Morris Avenue, the walls of the Broadway Diner are adorned with movie posters recalling the glamorous, glitzy years — from Judy Garland to "Starlin" in the Ring" to Liza Minnelli. Among the menu selections are "The Stars of Broadway," putting a new spin on old favorites like the Happy Wanderer grilled cheese sandwich, or slip slip or chicken in a basket. Value is an important part of Broadway Diner's appeal, with complete dinner specials starting at $7.95, boasting over 40 entree selections. The meal began with rolls and soup — good old chicken orzo for me, the Manhattan clam chowder for my dinner companion. For entrees, I chose Diana's chicken franchise over rice, which was tender and juicy. My companion chose chicken ala-Broadway, rigorously served with sauce made from plum tomatoes, garlic and Basil. Very satisfied after enjoying generous portions, we still found room for Broadway's delicious home made desserts, included in the meal — a slice of blueberry pie for me, and tasty rice pudding for my dinner companion. Broadway Diner also offers a daily menu, and beverages include capuccino and Polard spring water.	GARDEN BUFFET ALL YOU CAN EAT Over 150 Items Weekly Over 55 Items Daily Sunday Lobster Buffet 10 Lunch Buffet $5 Dinner Buffet $8* All-You-Can-Eat Buffet Lunch Buffet $6 Dinner Buffet $9* Full Service CATERING SERVICE 1181 Morris Ave • Union Over 600 Students 908-688-8998

Kessler offers new approach to chronic pain

Kessler Institute for Rehabilitation is offering a new alternative approach to manual therapy. Called the Roloff method of structural integration, it has been shown to be effective with people who suffer chronic pain and stress, as well as for those with nagging aches and pains of the neck, shoulders and back.

Structural integration is a systematic approach combining the manipulation of the body's soft tissue, strength, manual, examination and treatment, as well as education on movement. It aims to restore muscle and soft tissue balance, relieve chronic stresses, improve posture and restore optimal alignment of the body within the gravitational field.

This new approach is beneficial to many people from all walks of life and all ages. Athletes, dancers, fitness people, yoga students and those individuals with chronic pain, osteoporosis, or neurological problems can benefit from this technique which helps alleviate discomfort and pain, such as: Painful hand, trigger or carpal tunnel therapy at Kessler Institute for Rehabilitation. The goal is to help patients achieve a better sense of balance and relieve chronic stress.

any of those factors may cause an imbalance in the myofascial system, leading to chronic pain, discomfort, stiffness, decreased flexibility or impaired movement. Many people will experience "old age shrinking" in height, poor posture and loss of flexibility that increases with age. Structural integration seeks to interrupt this progressive cycle by restoring length and flexibility to the myofascial system.

The benefits from structural integration vary by individual because it is a very personal process," added Judd. "Most recently, we've used this as a complementary approach in patients with neurologic diagnoses such as multiple sclerosis, stroke and traumatic brain injury, and we have seen significant outcomes." We also recommend this therapy for certain individuals who suffer from chronic pain, fibromyalgia or "chronic fatigue syndrome."

In a Kessler study, structural integration was applied to a patient with multiple sclerosis and a patient with traumatic brain injury. The patient with multiple sclerosis had received surgery to repair a wound of the spinal column and pelvic area. As a result, she had developed a poor sitting posture and an inability to maintain her balance independently. Kessler physical therapists used structural integration with the goal of eliminating the need for specialized seating. After therapy, she experienced dramatic changes in her sitting posture and alignment as well as in her mobility skills. The TBI patient had completed inpatient and outpatient rehabilitation but still experienced impairments in balance and walking. After the 10-session series, he demonstrated improvements in walking, balance, breathing and the range of motion in his lower limbs, allowing him to return to work as a park ranger.

Developed in the 1960s, Dr. Ida P. Roloff was the founder of structural integration, which is also known as Roloff. Structural integration helps alleviate feelings of discomfort or pain and improves your sense of vitality and well being. Other benefits include greater flexibility, a feeling of lightness and fluidity, increased breathing capacity, increased energy and greater self-confidence.

For more information or to make an appointment for structural integration at a Kessler facility nearest you, call (888) KESSLER. Kessler Institute for Rehabilitation is the largest physical medicine and rehabilitation hospital in the state of New Jersey, with four inpatient facilities and 11 outpatient centers. With 10,000 members, Kessler physical therapists improve physical alignment by applying direct manual pressure to open and lengthen a person's connective tissue — a very tough, strong tissue that is the support system of the body. This tissue absorbs and responds to gravitational force, illness, injury, emotional trauma and everyday stress. Over time,

Make The Right Choice... Don't Drink And Drive This Holiday Season.

The holidays are a celebration of the end of the year, but unfortunately for those who drink and drive and their innocent victims, it could spell the end of a lifetime.

So while we want you to celebrate with lots of good cheer, if alcohol is part of the festivity, do the right thing and appoint a designated driver before leaving home.

And let "old acquaintances be forgot" we urge you to look out for others by not allowing anyone who is intoxicated get behind the wheel.

We care about our friends and neighbors, and look forward to seeing you during and after the holidays!

Hair club helps kids deal with chemotherapy

A kind gesture by the manufacturer of a hair treatment is helping children who have undergone chemotherapy to regain their self-confidence.

In the process of battling cancer with chemotherapy, many children lose their hair. For some the loss is temporary, but for a few children the hair never grows back.

Being bald at such a young age can be traumatic. It's often the most distressing side effect of the cancer treatment.

Once kids lose their hair, it's obvious to everyone that they are sick. They no longer look like their friends and other kids can be cruel. Hair loss can be emotionally crippling to pre-teens and teenagers (from whom appearance is so very important).

Coming to the rescue for some of these cancer survivors is Hair Club for Men, a company whose connecticut people men with thinning hair that they can't have hair again.

Offering them a new lease on life, the company provides hair transplants. Surgical hair treatment from which duplicates the way their hair grows, enabling them to go on to lead a very normal, active life.

Because it looks like their own hair, their friends accept them, making an unfortunate circumstance more comfortable.

"The program is the heart of the company," said Lisa Mauerlein, national director of Hair Club for Kids. "Hair Club" founders Sy and Amy Sperling created it because they believe that children face the future and they've seen what a difference it makes when these kids look in the mirror and see that they have hair again.

For more information, call 800/HAIR CLUB or visit them on the Web at www.hairclub.com.

Health insurer measure promotes wellness

The Seneca Health Committee has approved a measure sponsored by Assembly Deputy Minority Leader Neil M. Cohen that would require health insurance companies to provide consumers with an added incentive to choose well-these over illness.

"The measure, S.322/A.1653, would require health insurance carriers and managed care providers to provide coverage for health wellness examinations and counseling for families," said Cohen. "Preventive health and wellness care can prevent costly treatment later on," said Cohen. D.Upton. "Prevention is as necessary a component in the delivery of health care as is the treatment of illness and disease."

Under the current Health Wellness Promotion Act, health insurance carriers and managed care organizations can offer wellness examinations at an additional cost to the consumer. Cohen's measure would amend the act to require that such services be included as part of the basic policy coverage.

"Providing health, lifestyle management and disease prevention is a growing trend and an important aspect of the direction of health care," said Cohen. "Requiring insurance companies to cover preventive care services would mean healthier children and more productive adults."

"Health and wellness programs help people quit smoking, improve their diets, exercise, get skilled prenatal care and provide health screenings for children. They are a crucial health care necessity. Companies have increasingly financed health and wellness programs for employees to increase employee productivity and reduce insurance costs."

According to a March 1998 survey by the New Jersey Business and Industry Association, 94 percent of the responding employers provide health insurance to employees.

"As the cost of health care continues to increase, early detection such as cancer screenings, colon examination and cholesterol tests can greatly improve patient survival and provide cost-savings down the road," said Cohen.

CHIROPRACTIC FOR BETTER HEALTH

DR. DONALD ANTONELLI CHIROPRACTOR

SHOULDER PAIN

Shoulder suffering from shoulder pain and stiffness can mean that you're missing out on a lot of the fun of life. A mechanical body is a proper foundation as important to your physical health. Your shoulder pain may be due to a structural imbalance that needs to be corrected before the pain sets in.

When the forces, strain or imbalance on your shoulder joint is not balanced, your body has to work to correct the imbalance. This can lead to a host of problems, many of which are preventable. When you have the proper balance, your body can work more efficiently and you can avoid the pain and stiffness that can result from a shoulder injury.

In the event of a better person, Dr. Donald Antonelli, a Chiropractor, is available to help you. He is located at 2578 Morris Ave., Union, NJ 07087-3737.

Weichert guide offers tips for selling home

A new edition of "Selling Your Home" is available for purchase by multiple buyers who want to see the best offer possible for their homes.

The guide, published by Weichert Realtors, explains the importance of having a well-thought-out marketing plan when preparing to move. The guide covers the vital strategies that will help you sell your home quickly and for the best price.

According to the guide, there are several key factors that affect the value of your home. These include the location, the condition of the home, and the overall market conditions. The guide provides a checklist of items to check before listing your home, including the roof, the foundation, and the plumbing.

The guide also offers advice on how to price your home. It suggests that you should research the market and compare your home to similar properties in the area. The guide also provides information on how to negotiate offers and how to close the sale.

'Selling Your Home' explains how Weichert's One Stop Shopping Services can be an integral part of marketing your home.

should be fertilized, well-maintained and edged.

Clean windows show the bright side of your home. Open drapes and curtains to highlight walls and ceilings and to show how cheerful your home can be. You never get a second chance to make a first impression.

Make closets look larger by removing packing items that can be stored elsewhere.

At night, have your house well lit throughout when the hour is the appointment hours.

"Selling Your Home" also explains how Weichert's One Stop Shopping Services can be an integral part of marketing your home. Weichert Real Estate has access to a network of people transferring into the area. Multi-gate Access Card, another Weichert affiliate, can proactively promote buyers to go through to your home.

For more information, call your local Weichert Realtors office for a free copy of "Selling Your Home." It is available at all of Weichert Realtors' 200 offices.

Springfield building nets sale

Weichert Commercial Realtors sold a 30,000 square-foot office building in Springfield. Operating Engineers Local 825 Fund and is now marketing the fund's former headquarters, an 11,000 square foot building with one acre of water front property on McCarter Highway in Newark.

The building is next to the proposed Joseph Minish Waterfront Park & Historic Area and across the street from the Essex County Sportsplex. Two important components of Newark's revitalization plan. Tim Fogarty, senior vice president with Weichert Commercial, represented the Local 825 Fund in their purchase of the Springfield building and serves as exclusive broker in marketing the Newark property.

Fogarty commented, "Operating Engineers Local 825 required a large building for their expanded business and selected this 11-story office building in Springfield, located in Springfield Avenue. This relocation opens up new possibilities for the Newark office building, which could continue to serve an office user or be converted to a waterfront restaurant. The building will access a promenade along the waterfront that is part of the Joseph Minish Waterfront Park & Historic Area. Essex County Sportsplex, home of the Newark Bears minor league baseball team, has broken ground just across the street. The building has immediate access to Route 280 at Bridge Street and is located just four miles from the Performing Arts Center. This area is the cultural and recreational center of Newark and could be an ideal spot for a restaurant business."

The two-story building is also an excellent site for office space because of its easy access to major highways. The property also features paved parking for 100 cars.

Buick's 3800 Series II V-6 gives drivers a 'boost'

Buick leads the industry in providing cars with supercharged engines in the 1990s — the latest chapter in a long heritage of "boosted" Buicks.

It's a heritage that includes two spectacular concept cars of the early 1950s, an innovative Indianapolis 500 pace car project of the mid-1970s and the famous turbocharged Grand Nationals and GNXs of the late 1980s. The Buick supercharged series even includes a Buick Skylark of the mid-1970s and a 2000 cc V-6 for a gathering of automotive writers in 1989.

Supercharging came to production Buicks late in the 1991 model year because Buick leaders concluded that a supercharged V-6 offers a compelling combination of virtues: compactness, durability, reliability, fuel efficiency, smoothness and plenty of power.

During the eight model years it has offered the supercharged 3.8-liter V-6 — first the 3800 and now the 3800 Series II — Buick has sold more than 180,000 supercharged cars. That's more than any other automaker in the 1990s, though some of the world's most expensive luxury marques are placing renewed emphasis on supercharged power.

Three current-model Buicks are offered with the 240-horsepower supercharged V-6 as standard equipment — Park Avenue Ultra, Buick's highly styled luxury coupe, and Regal GS, the midsize sport sedan.

A supercharger increases the power of an engine by pushing additional air into the cylinders, where it is mixed with additional fuel, generating more power with each cycle. The supercharged 3800 Series II V-6 uses a sophisticated Roots-type supercharger manufactured by Eaton Corp. designed to provide this additional power only when the driver demands it.

Based on the tests of one major automotive magazine, the supercharged engines are delivering. The Regal GS, for example, was clocked at 6.6 seconds for 0-60 mph compared with 7.8 seconds for Honda Accord EX V-6; 7.9 for Toyota Camry, XLE V-6; 8.9 for Dodge Intrepid and 7.7 for Ford Taurus SHO.

And both Park Avenue Ultra and Riviera were quicker. GM's Buick Riviera, a midsize sports coupe, was also more fuel efficient and less expensive by several thousand dollars.

Supercharging is only the latest engine chapter for an automaker that takes pride in its full range of Buick Motor Division with the emphasis on "boost."

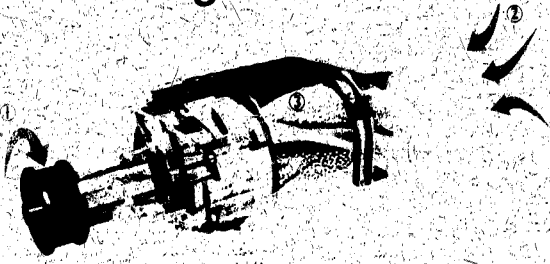

Buick, which celebrates its 75th anniversary in 1998, traces its early success to its patented 1904 application of the overhead valve principle. Buick's famous "valve-in-head" engines were more efficient and cranked out more output per volume of displacement than flat-top engines, and they built Buick's reputation for power and performance. As early Buick leader and General Motors founder William C. Durant wrote in the 1930s, "Power sold Buick and made it what it is today."

Buick was soon spinning hill-climbs and races across the country — the Buick racing team won 500 trophies between 1908 and 1910 — and that kind of success boosted sales. In 1906, Buick claimed to lead the industry with 35,000 cars, and more than Ford and General Motors. Buick's competitors, estimated that year, Buick Motor Company occupies the financial foundation of the section of General Motors, now the world's largest automaker.

Development of Buick's patented overhead valve is generally credited to a combination of David Danbar, Walter L. Marz and Eugene Richard. In later decades, Buick attracted further attention with its engines. In 1931, there was the "fireball" straight-eight. A powerful 100-hp engine was introduced on the classic 1931 Skylark to help celebrate Buick's 50th anniversary. In 1952, Buick engineered and manufactured the first U.S. mass-produced V-6 which resulted in the '52 Special, best named Motor Trend magazine "Car of the Year" and the turbocharged '66 that first showed up in 1976 production models, reworked in the 1978 Riviera S-Type, becoming another Motor Trend "Car of the Year."

Later upgrades of the turbo V-6 powered the famous Regal Grand Nationals and almost identical GNXs of the late 1980s.

Twice in the 1990s, Buick took

This supercharger used with the 3.8-liter 3800 Series II V-6 engine is standard on Buick Park Avenue, Riviera and Regal GS. Arrows show how 1, the belt from the crankshaft drives the supercharger; 2, air is drawn into the supercharger; 3, impellers rotating at high rpm increase the rate of airflow; and 4, air is forced into the intake manifold to increase the amount of air in combustion chamber.

buick racing powerplants, earned a third or more of the 33 starting positions in the Indianapolis 500. They also won the pole in record-time performances on two occasions, and finished as high as third in this decade before Buick's emphasis shifted away from motorsports.

While Buick gained additional experience in producing high-performance engines, Buick's 1,320 Liberty V-12 sported engines in World War I and early 1930s Pratt & Whitney engines — some of them supercharged — for bombers in World War II, its first venture into automotive supercharging took place in 1950-1951.

In that period, Buick and its parent GM organization produced two spectacular 1951 concept cars — LeSabre and XP-300 — that had aluminum V-8 engines that required a fuel mixture of methanol gasoline. And both were supercharged to 345 horsepower. "Vintage journalist Orin Hogson wrote: "Take off the blower and the metal sink and this guy is tomorrow's Buick engine."

Auto writers invited by Buick Public Relations to an unusual press event in March 1989 at Ford's Raceway in Bowling Green, Ohio, even today, helped write the final chapter in Buick's switch to supercharging. They also helped make that switch.

The writers were invited to drive six experimental cars Buick had taken out of hiding and to let Buick know their opinions. There were three-way place battles: an Estate Wagon with a Grand National engine and two Regals. One was a reactive coupe with turbocharged and "induced" 3.8-liter V-6. The others were a front-drive coupe with Eaton supercharged 3.8 V-6. The press had a lot of differing opinions, but the strong consensus was for the supercharged cars. "The supercharged Regal is what I want. I should have said so earlier. The engine was strong and quiet. The acceleration was superb."

Armed with a string of 10 for supercharging from some of the top auto writers in the country, Buick, General Manager Edward H. Merry, pushed supercharging. At the end of the 1991 model year, Merry was able to offer 1992 Park Avenue Ultra with 205-horsepower supercharged 3800 V-6. That engine became standard in Ultra in 1992. Improvements to the engine in '93 boosted output in the supercharged version to 225 hp. In 1996, the supercharged version of the 3800 Series II was introduced with 240 hp.

The supercharged 3800 was an option on the spectacularly redesigned Riviera for 1995. When the 240-hp Series II version came along in '96, it took as Riviera's optional engine. In the 1998 model year, the supercharged engine was made standard in Riviera. When Regal was redesigned 3800 as mid-year model, the GS version received the supercharged 3800 Series II as standard and the LS version received the naturally aspirated 3800 Series II.

A few years later to pursue the powerful engines of the muscle-car era, instead of pushing economical specials, Buick was racing with the Chevy GSX. That car ended abruptly with the Arab oil embargo of late 1973 — and Buick was happy to buy the V-6 looking back from Jeep's new owner, American Motors, So, by the late 1970s, Buick was heavily committed to the V-6 in many of its cars, and a turbocharged version for the '76 Regal. Buick 500 pace car helped provide a halo for that engine.

The pace car experiment was successful and for 1978 Buick was producing turbocharged V-6 for the market. Notably, Buick provided a highly sophisticated turbo— Buick for the 1983 Indy 500 pace car, a Riviera convertible. Before Buick was through with turbocharging, it had created an American cult car — the Regal Grand National. In 1986 and '87, intercooled and turbocharged Grand Nationals were widely recognized as the quickest American cars — until Buick produced 5.7-liter

One of Buick's first problems was to figure out how to provide a powerful pace car for the 1978 Indianapolis 500. The decision favored the Chevy's turbo and turbocharge a V-6.

A turbocharged V-6.6 as pace car at Indy was a great marketing move as well. Buick had been successful with the V-6 for the 1962 Special, but sold the engine to Kaiser Jeep

GMC drivers are in command of their truck body

The Truck Body Controller puts GMC drivers comfortably in command with a new package of safety, convenience and lighting functions. The computer-based controller provides these electronic features:

- Automatic headlamp control. Automatically illuminates and switches between daytime running lamps and headlamps based on ambient light conditions. At lighting conditions change, the exterior lights adjust.
- Passlock theft-deterrent system. A security feature requires key cycling. In addition, if the steering column breaks or forces key cylinder rotation, the fuel becomes disabled for ten minutes if ignition is attempted by any method other than the proper key.
- Battery rundown protection. Courtesy and vanity mirrors, reading light, glove box, under hood and car go lamps are deactivated after 20-40 minutes if left on after the ignition is turned off. Head lamps and parking lamps are not included.
- Remote panic air-vehicle locator. Press "remote panic" button on key fob and head lamps blink and horn is activated until button is pressed a second time. 30 seconds pass or ignition key is turned on.
- Exit lighting. The interior lights illuminate for 30 seconds after removal of the ignition key.
- Remote door lock/unlock feedback. Light blink and horn chirps to acknowledge key fob button action.
- Retained accessory power. Power to radio, windows, sunroof and overhead console remains on for 20 minutes after ignition is turned off or until any door is opened.
- Lockout prevention. If power door lock button is pressed while keys are in the ignition, all doors will lock. This driver's door will unlock automatically.
- Turn signal reminder. A chime will sound after three-quarters of a mile travel distance if turn signal lever is activated.
