Room 12

Room 12 of the Workmen's Compensation Court in Halsey Street in Newark is where the High Christy Corp. conducts hearings on accident compensation of a person's employees.

The journey of Dietz from Superior Court Judge to the court set off a battle between the branches of government — which raised troubling questions over judicial selection. Some would be less genteel and call the treatment a vindictive blackball by the former Union County resident.

Left Out

By Frank Copeco

Those who don't subscribe to the laws of trade publications of the Law Journal said they were never given any ink knowledge of the Dietz re-appointment process which was to elaborate a road to the grandstand game board.

As a basic primer, Dietz was denied re-appointment after his seven-year term on the bench because of the terms of a compact between the State Bar and Governor since Richard Hughes, a judge who doesn't pass muster with the State Bar Committee on Judicial appointments will not be nominated in an 18th case, re-nominated to a re-appointment by the governor. Dietz did pass the review of the Union County Bar Public Links.

While silence surrounds the review process, the trade publications puffed a rather a truly troubling story.

On Aug. 30 of last year, the Law Journal "giving" Union County lawyers, and state senators Louis Bassano and Raymond Lesniak reported that Dietz was the victim of a blackball by a lawyer who served on both the Union County and State Bar Committee with oversight power. Regarding Summit attorney, Tazanne Cecchi, the Law Journal reported, "never said she did not like Dietz because of a conflict of interest in his contract."

In July, the Law Journal reported on an incident where Cecchi she argued with a Dietz Court decision, became estranged and began shouting, "Bassano said, 'Dietz may have a grip that Cecchi was going for him. She should have told the truth from the start that she was staying away from it.'"

Angered from the abuse of Dietz, who received high grades from the Administrative Office of the Court in 1997, Lesniak and Bassano were able to get Dietz appointed to the Compensation Court. Both senators have questioned the selection process. CONTROVERSY, Page B2

Freeholders to approve road projects

By Mark Hrywna
Regional Editor

The Union County Board of Chosen Freeholders is expected to approve a road reconstruction plan at its meeting tonight which would repair 18 miles of county roads this spring and summer and begin work on several intersection and bridge-improvement projects. In addition, freeholders hope the plan will better address the county's long-term planning for infrastructure projects.

The Union County Investment in Infrastructure plan presented to freeholders earlier this month is a joint effort between the county manager's office, Department of Economic Development and Department of Transportation Services.

The project calls for the reconstruction of $128 million in supplies from existing capital accounts to purchase millions of dollars in state funding for county projects. Several projects received state funding for county projects. Several projects will result in $10 million in construction and create jobs while improving and rebuilding our roads, she said.

"There is an outstanding plan that has been already allocated," said Freeholder Vice Chairman Dan Williams, "and will get projects going and put people to work."

"The goal is to move forward with necessary and previously approved projects such as the $128 million and Freeholder Linda Stender, who chairs the Board's Economic Development Committee. "The five-year, five-point program will result in $10 million in construction and create jobs while improving and rebuilding our roads," she said.

The engineering project allows for better planning for funding, said Deputy County Executive Steve Spillio, who is now studying the project.

The plan calls for county departments to closely coordinate engineering and planning, timing and funding, and appropriate levels of staffing over the long term. "We need to plan ahead to keep projects in the pipeline. The planning is the way to target projects and win state funding for them," said Stender.

The county expects to award contracts for the projects throughout the spring. Repaving work on the first group of streets is expected sometime between July and September.

along a second group of streets by September or October. Preparation for construction will begin at the first group of intersections in the fall. The projects will be prioritized based on safety, economic impact and engineering need.

Intersection improvements

The following intersection improvement projects already have secured construction funding and will receive funding.

- In Clark, Central Avenue at Rabbit Road
- In Cranford, Springfield Avenue at Kenilworth Boulevard and South Avenue Connector
- In Joliet, Roselle Street at Elizabeth Avenue
- In New Providence, Springfield Avenue at South Street and Passaic Street and the Park & Ride at Springfield Avenue
- In Springfield, Mulholland Road at Mersel Avenue
- In Summit, Broad Street at Maple Street, Ashland Avenue and Broad Street at Morris Avenue and Summit Avenue at Deborah Avenue
- In Westfield, South Street at Westfield Avenue and South Street at Summit Avenue

Final design and engineering for several bridge repair projects would require 12 to 18 months to complete, time which will be used to secure construction money. The county's bridge projects are Springfield Avenue over the Rahway River in Rahway and Clark Avenue over the Elizabeth River in Joliet.

For the "mid-range projects," projects will be staggered so that once designed, construction work will be in progress on a continuous basis. A group of recommended projects for the longer term will be created with consideration to safety, economic impact, engineering need and the county's economic development strategy and ability to assist municipalities.

"The entire investment plan can be accomplished without any new spending of county dollars. It's an excellent deal for taxpayers," said Freeholder Chairman Nick Scaroni.

The freeholders are scheduled to hold a public agenda session and regular meeting tonight at 6:30 p.m. in the freeholder meeting room on the sixth floor of the county multifunction building, Fairclough Plaza, Elizabeth.

Energy savings examined

By Mark Hrywna
Regional Editor

The Union County Board of Chosen Freeholders was presented with a plan to save money through energy conservation and newer, more energy-efficient equipment.

Representatives from NUI presented their findings after completing an energy audit of the county and found two areas for potential savings: Runnells Hospital in Berkeley Heights and the county complex in Elizabeth.

Union-based NUI, the parent company of Elizabethtown Gas, entered into a contract with the county last summer to examine areas of potential energy savings.

NUI suggested upgrading an on-site cogeneration plant at the hospital, similar to one built at the county complex several years ago. The plant would generate electricity to generate its own power, with savings to purchase it from a utility company.

"Also suggested was modernization of the hospital's lighting, which could reduce energy use by 30 percent," said Tom O'Leary, a county representative. "The lighting at the hospital is about 10 years old and needs to be replaced soon anyway," he said.

Initially, variable speed drives on air handlers were suggested for Runnells. O'Leary said fans for the heat and air conditioning systems presently have only an on/off switch — but on between "variable speed drives," he said, would allow for partial use of the fans to drive the heat and air conditioning, thus reducing energy consumption.

Estimated annual savings through the proposal at Runnells are $160,000. After a capital investment of $800,000 for the proposed changes, it would take five-and-a-half years to pay back the investment.

Under and a large majority of savings, as well as the capital investment, would come from the proposed cogeneration plant at Runnells. He said after.

Union County Freeholder Mary Rutolo, joined the Commission on the Status of Women in Union County recently for the first in a series, "Discussions Among Women," at Union County College in Cranford. The first interactive workshop focused on the physical and emotional effects of menopause on women and asked important answer questions," Rutolo said.

Controversy has its winners

Former county freeholder dead at 53

William H. Eldridge, 53, of Berkeley Heights, a former Union County freeholder and Union County Republican chairman, died Jan. 25 in Newark Hospital, Summit. A funeral service will be Friday at 10 a.m. at the Diamond Hill United Methodist Church, 105 Diamond Hill Road, Berkeley Heights.

Born in Orange, Mr. Eldridge lived in Sparta before moving to Berkeley Heights in 1976. He graduated from Rutgers College in 1969, with a Bachelor of arts with high honors degree and with distinction in political science.

He served as a captain in the United States Army Judge Advocate General Corps 1973 to 1976. Mr. Eldridge received a medal for military merit. He was a full professor of business law in the management science department of Kent University.

Mr. Eldridge published books on contracts, the core of business law and strategic management in the public sector. A book on business ethics will be published in March. He also was an instructor for the Fox Geary CPA Review. Mr. Eldridge had been an adjunct professor for the Rutgers University public administration program.

Before teaching, he was an executive director of the New Jersey Commission on Capital Budgeting and Planning under Governor Thomas Kean. Mr. Eldridge also worked at U.S. Trust, Citibank and Stanley and Fisher. He served as Union County freeholder from 1989 to 1998.

Mr. Eldridge was chairman of the Union County Republican Party from 1987 to 1989. He was a delegate to the Republican National Convention in 1988. Mr. Eldridge was mayor of Berkeley Heights in 1982. He served as a member of the Berkeley Heights Township Committee from 1981 to 1983 and was a member and chairman of the Republican Municipal Council.

He served on the Election Law Enforcement Commission from 1993 to 1998 and served as chairman. He and his wife, Ann, chaired the United Way Annual Drive in Berkeley Heights for several years. Also surviving are his parents, Albert and Helen Eldridge, and a brother, James.

Potential savings at hospital, jail

The second-most energy used by the county is in that the County Complex, said Coster, and thus, a second proposal for savings could be the new jail. Lake Runnells Hospital the jail could use modernization of its lighting, said Coster, in addition to lighting upgrades at the parking garage and electronic board building.

The expansion of the existing cogeneration plant at the county complex would address the additional energy needs of the county, said Coster. 391 representatives estimated the just proposed cost of the plant $25.1 million annually after 10 years of investment of $1.4 million. It would take the county 100 and half years to recoup the investment, Coster said.

Freeholder Linda Stender said the next step is to assess the suggestions and make a decision whether to move forward during that year's annual capital budget discussions.

Runnells Hospital has been providing service for 75 years

For the better part of the 20th century, Runnells Specialized Hospital of Union County has been trusted by the community in Union County as a provider of quality, specialized care. This tradition is expected to continue in the coming century.

"Whenever people are asked what county government does, what they consider of great value, Runnells is at the top of their list," said Freeholder Chairman Nicholas P. Sculan.

First opened in 1912, the original facility met the needs of those with tuberculosis, but much has changed over the years. First, the name has changed. Originally, the types of care have changed to meet the needs of the community.

Runnells is now a provider of nursing care with long and short-term, including physical, medical and rehabilitation and psychiatric services. And the housing itself is new.

The facility left the Plainfield Avenue site familiar to so many residents in 1990. Union County built a completely new, state-of-the-art building just off Horseshoe Road north of the old site in Berkeley Heights.

"Much has changed but one thing has remained the same," said Freeholder Liaison Mary Rutolo. "Runnells is still a very warm, caring place whose motto is 'The Quality of Our Care is the Quality of Our People Who Care'."

Primarily, Runnells is known for long- and short-term nursing care. A long-term care is appropriate for a person who is no longer able to live in the community. An individual appropriate to short-term care is one who has had an acute episode of illness who is not yet well enough to return home, but will benefit from a traditional hospital.

In both instances, individuals often have multiple medical conditions requiring the 24-hour-a-day professional nurses and physicians on duty at Runnells—a unique quality of the facility. Additionally, they benefit from the array of therapies provided including physical, occupational, psychiatric, and speech, as well as a full complement of social workers attending to residents' needs.

Aging in place is the most desirable alternative. The community provides an array of services to make home care possible in many cases. However, many times a lack of stimulation can lead to a much lower quality of life for the isolated/disabled or the frail/elderly. What also serves beneficial about Runnells is the wide array of appropriate activities provided daily.

Runnells residents have a full schedule of activities to choose from, presented by an experienced staff of professional and volunteer therapists.

Residents enjoy regular outings in the Runnells bus to such destinations as shopping malls, movie theaters, nature centers, fitness studios, swimming at the Y, and the public library.

Other activities include bingo, ceramics, crafts, and games, choir, cooking, exercising, holiday parties and picnics. Weather permitting, residents enjoy outdoor gardening in wheelchair-accessible planters located in the spacious courtyard. Input from an active Residents' Council assures programs meet the needs and desires of the residents.

Runnells is known throughout the region as the experienced provider of care for individuals with middle to advanced stages of dementia, including Alzheimer's. These residents find particular enjoyment in the many musically-oriented activities from group sing-alongs, to shared presentations by local theatrical troupes, to the appearance of small bands playing old favorites. Often times, music will inspire these residents to leave their seats and dance—a smiling with a broad smile across their faces.

Runnells has a proud reputation as a provider of quality rehabilitation in the Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation Center. Here, patients are provided the same array of therapies and a host of activities. A patient appropriate to the center would be one who has experienced a stroke or orthopedic surgery for a fracture, a joint replacement or an amputation.

Continuing is the name of Runnells' adult psychiatric service that provides intermediate care with an emphasis on preparation on the patient's return to the community, which involves the family whenever possible.

Choosing a provider for these types of care is often not an easy one, but an experienced staff of professionals is available to assist families exploring their options.

Runnells encourages people to meet the staff and tour the facility, located just minutes from Routes 22 and 78 before making that decision. The admission office is available to give tours at the facility's convenient at (908) 778-5601.

Arts Guild of Rahway builds on an historic legacy

By Jacquie McCarthy

Arts Editor

Lawrence Cappiello is living proof that artistic opportunities abound in Rahway. A native and current resident of the city, and having spent his life studying and participating in many aspects of the arts, Cappiello is the executive director of the newly formed Arts Guild of Rahway, which will take up residence in the former Clark-Reed Recreation and Cultural Center on its new site in the heart of Rahway's designated Arts District.

Cappiello has spent a lot of time in the Arts Guild's new home — not only through his current effort of overseeing the building's extensive renovation, but also in his visits when the building was the original Rahway Library.

"I started to draw when I was five, I taught myself to paint when I was 12," Cappiello said. "I used to go to the Rahway Art Club and just take out all the books of their art history and study it. I thought it was a lot better than school."

Cappiello added, with a chuckle, "I used to go to the Rahway Art Club and just take out all the books of their art history and study it. I thought it was a lot better than school."

Cappiello stated that the Arts Guild was founded to promote activities encompassing all aspects of the fine and visual arts, performing arts and musical theater education as a primary focus. A key part of its organization, the Guild's Board of Trustees consists of 10 members, executive director, and Union County Arts Center, which is board president, Mike Mela of Monticello Stated Glass, Barry Bickman of Royal Treasures, Amigos and Danie Cinchola, visual artist and Rahway resident.

After graduating from Rahway High School, Cappiello attended City College in Wallerstein, Maine, earning a bachelor's degree in fine art.

His senior year at City College, Cappiello said, he spent his senior year after college working in theater performing Shakespearean plays for four years and studying with Stella Adler in New York City for two years.

Cappiello met one of the authors of the book in 1984. "I just stopped. I found that I was doing other things more than I was doing theater, and I just had to wonder if that was really the way to go," he said.

Cappiello made his living as a freelance commercial artist in New York City for the next five years, although he returned to his hometown in 1989. "I always wanted to do more for a living," Cappiello said on his first "Even though I learned a lot in school, I knew I wasn't ready to go into the real world at that point. I had to learn a lot of other things. I continued to work on my other things, but not seriously as a professional might."

Cappiello got serious about his art again a few years ago, and obtained his master's degree in art education from the University of Connecticut in 1998.

And that is how he found his way to the Arts Guild. "I really came to love art and teaching, and I think it was good for me to be involved in it," Cappiello said. "I had been thinking for the last few years that I'd like to do something as a volunteer or to make a contribution, and this seemed like a good opportunity."

Back in the library, with a full-time office at Union County Arts Center, down the street, Cappiello began doing his work.

"What I've been doing for the last few years is to do other art organizations, and I realize that there's a lot of people in New Jersey all over the place who are interested in art," he said. "I think it's an interest of my own, it added to my enthusiasm."

Cappiello began networking with other galleries, theaters in Union and Essex counties, and with input from the Guild board, has put dozens of programs together, that would be a good start. "I had a lot of good ideas for small-scale performing arts, or art education. The prime thing that we set out to do is to establish a center for the arts to promote the visual arts with the art gallery, to establish some small-scale space, musical, theater, and some education programming."

After that, he said, "I'm not sure," Cappiello said, laughing. "But I don't see it as a limiting factor. I think just opening up the possibilities will be our strength. It will be kind of organic. It will all be a part of growing and developing and becoming the center for the arts that we're hoping for."

At this point, the building is under way. As he pointed to the building that is being put together, he said, "We're raising the funds, but we're in funds, the more programming I can offer."

The initial phase of fundraising has been completed and capital expenses for the new gallery, which is located at the site of the former Clark-Reed Center, were completed in early 1998. The city council ordinance authorizing the building was passed in 1998.

"That was for the restoration of the building, and then the entire cost of the building was covered," he said. "The next year, 2000, the city had been doing the restoration of the building, and then the entire cost of the building was covered."

Community Development Block Grant in the amount of $50,000, provided by the City of Rahway, is being used by Cappiello to help pay the building's operating expenses. As of 1998, the city council ordinance authorizing the building was passed in 1998.

"I'm not sure," Cappiello said, "but I don't see it as a limiting factor. I think just opening up the possibilities will be our strength. It will be kind of organic. It will all be a part of growing and developing and becoming the center for the arts that we're hoping for."

At this point, the building is under way. As he pointed to the building that is being put together, he said, "We're raising the funds, but we're in funds, the more programming I can offer."

Dorfman dance company creates FamilyTime fun for all ages

By Jacquie McCarthy

Arts Editor

The Carolyn Dorfman Dance Company of Union first opened its 1998 season with a debut performance in 80th Street, Rahway Arts Center's new Theater Building. The new FamilyTime series, the talented choreographer has returned from a year-long sabbatical to show that her temporary dance company still has what it takes — and how.

The program opened with "Love Suite," which premiered in 1992, and more than lives up to the title. Set to the unforgettable music of Philip Glass, the dancers, clad in colorful tutus and tops, moved up as couples, interacting in "Sweet Moments," incorporating equally colorful puppets. "That's My Desire" began with a man and woman discovering a bottle of wine, and a third person joined in a month in an amusing way. It all led to a third featured piece, "Think Dancers Taking and Turning on Ever-Tapering Legs," which was even smaller than "Love Suite."

"Love Suite" featured the full company in a complex depiction of family dancing. The program was a beautiful blend of family dancing.

Love Suite, Love Suite, New Jersey premiere of "Private Lives," women number created in 1996, and a commissioned score by the same pianist by Jennifer Hensing. Each score features diverse dancers forming the "ritual," flowing dances, was completed by the first time of the evening. Glass' term "Sweet Suite" and "Love Suite" with the piano, and offering no words, but voice as an instrument to augment the moment, as dancers glided, assuring beautiful poses to create an abstract image of love.

In the second half of the program, Dorfman stepped out on stage to conduct "Inside View," a look at the creative process of dance. "In an effort to share the evolution of dance with the audience, Dorfman showed a side of a rehearsal of her choreography, 'Secrets,' a sensual, interaction between a male and female dancer which debuted in 1994. The dancers then presented "Duet" and "Quartet," both derived from the original choreography.

"Inside View" evolved into the "Educational" portion of the program. Dorfman told the audience, "I've created a new piece as a tribute to the work in the theater, and it's supported over 50 performers in other parts with non-profit theaters and cultural institutions worldwide. With a lot of bringing plays, operas, and musicals to the widest possible audience. The AT&T OnStage grants are provided primarily for production costs, complemented by support for advertising and marketing."

"Philanthropy continues to be a key value for AT&T. It's an important part of our support of theater, and we'll continue to support the arts and the theater. We'll continue to support the arts and the theater. We'll continue to support the arts and the theater."

County teen arts seeks volunteers for annual festival

Do you like working with artists, teachers and students? The Union County Teen Arts Festival offers an opportunity for volunteers to get involved.

The Union County Teen Arts Festival, sponsored by the Union County Board of Chosen Freeholders and the Division of Cultural and Heritage Affairs, Department of Economic Development, is a two-day celebration of the arts held annually at Union County College in Randolph. The festival, scheduled for March 24 and 25, is open to all students from public, private and parochial middle and high schools in the county.

At the festival, 3000 students participate in performances; creating murals; performing classes and workshops, with a staff of 50 professional artists in every discipline — visual art, music, creative writing, theater and dance. Said Fr-elouder Mary, Director of the Cultural and Heritage Programs, Advisory Board.

Volunteers are needed to assist artists with workshops; manage performance sites and staff information stations. "We currently have an available assistance of approximately 15 residents with this exciting program."

If you are interested in any of these activities, contact the Union County Division of Cultural and Heritage Affairs at 681 Park St., Elizabeth, NJ 07201 (908) 558-2550. Relay access: NJ 800.452.7829.

Independent film chronicles football fan's worst nightmare

Over the last decade a slew of actors have decided to direct their own star vehicle. The most famous of these might be probably Mel Gibson with "Braveheart" and Kevin Costner with "Hombre." With "Billie Jean" Penn also entered the arena with "Judar Rimmer" and Kiefer Sutherland directed and starred in "Muth of a Conspiracy." Now, actor Steve Buscemi has taken the same route with "Three Lounge."

Vincent Gallo, who has appeared in "The Funeral," "Black and White" and a dozen other movies, makes his transition to the director's chair with "Billie Jean." Gallo's "Billie Jean" is a twisted, thirty-minute film that has been released from a five-year stretch in the state prison. He is in search of the rights having served the sentence as part of a plea to pay off a $100,000 debt.

The Video Detective

Once at the patient's house, he gains an inkling of what's going on. Billy Jean's wife, who is later, played by Ben Chasity, is detached from his son and is more interested in the possibility of his new daughter-in-law. Billy Jean's wife, played by Louise Lasser, is one of the possible hard-core Billie Jean fans on the planet. In a moment of inebriated weakness, she says she only missed the Buffalo Bills game that game because she was in the day. Had Billy Jean simply said, "I never should have had him."

The bizarre triple twist and dad, Billy Jean and Layla, who have now gotten fully attached to each other. For one of his local local haunts, the town bowling alley. It's another strange twist to his past and another missed step on his death-his dream murdering the Billie Jean killer, who Billy Jean now owns a strip club. Paul Robeson documentary to air in February

Paul Robeson. Here I Stand, a PBS special airing in February, the exclusive permission to use Robeson archives of personal papers, private films, confidential political documents and poignant diaries on a journey across America, Wales, France, Germany, Russia and Africa.

His stage performances as "Othello" and "Emperor Jones," as well as his magnificent singing voice, are still remembered as perhaps the most compelling and extraordinary artistic achievements of the 20th century. He was a linguist, a cultural scholar, an author, a sports legend and civil rights activist. His worldwide acclaim marked him as a hero — and a danger in a racially divided American society. Robeson, whose centennial was celebrated in 1998, is arguably one of the most visible, influential, recognized and admired Americans of his time.

And now, in the first comprehensive personal portrait of Robeson made with the help of his family, public television's highly acclaimed American Masters series, from Menar Media International, has produced a documentary which will take the film crew across America and across the world, including new interviews with Harry Belafonte, Pete Seeger, Lena Horne, Gordon Parks and surfing, friends and co-workers of Robeson.

American Masters is produced for PBS by Thirteen/WNY13, in New York. Menar Media International is a New York based production company specializing in documentary films.

The two-hour documentary will include rare film and documents from Robeson's "Russian Experience," made available to the producers specifically for this project. Among the other materials from the collection amassed by Paul Robeson Jr. are the personal papers, private films of Robeson, confidential documents concerning Robeson's political activities, his wife's diaries and first-hand accounts of a man no two people describe the same way.

"He has always been and continues to be an integral part of American history and the American imagination," said American Masters executive producer Susan Eason.

The son of a former slave, Robeson first gained national attention as an undergraduate at Rutgers University, where he was one of the only two black students. There he won the Phi Beta Kappa, scholastic honors as a minor, was a two-year All-American football player, captured the debating championship in each of his four undergraduate years, and was selected valedictorian of his graduating class. He completed Columbia University Law School in 1923, but chose instead to pursue a career in the performing arts.

His talents as a singer and actor quickly brought him international stardom in many venues: concert hall, theater, lecture, film and recording studio. During the late 20s and 30s, Robeson brought himself in Laidlaw and toured throughout Europe, becoming one of the world's leading performers in the theater, on the concert stage and in film.

Red-baiting in 1930, he became a national symbol and a cultural leader in the war against fascism and racism at home, abroad, and betrayed by both the general public and prominent personalities as figures: Albert Einstein, Eleanor Roosevelt, W. E. B. DuBois, Langston Hughes, Henry Wallace and Martin Luther King. His most stirring era of the 1950s, every attempt was made to silence and discredit him because of his political views and his dedication to the cause of civil rights.

Paul Robeson: Here I Stand is directed by St. Clair Bourne, whose credits include "Mish and Reckless" and "Breaking the Barriers." The BBC also narrates about the impact of racial prejudice on sports. Heardward's documentary "Let the Church Say Amen" and "Langston Hughes: The Dream Keeper," a narrative performance film about the great poet, will be produced by Glassnitz, whose productions have won Academy, Emmy and AFI awards. Executive producers for the American Masters project are Lena Horne and David J. Meyer. Menar Media International will have recent successes for PBS include "Novels: Journey to Kilimanjaro," "The Hole Story," "The Underdog of the Kalahari," and who is the creator of the executive producer "Thomas of Canby," a six-part dramatic miniseries on the history of the Negro Baseball Leagues.

For over 12 years, the American Masters series, produced and presented by THIRTEEN/WNY13 on PBS, has drawn national and international audiences to its profiles of the best and achievements of important figures in American arts and culture.

Kent Place Gallery exhibit explores the spirit of matter

The photographs of Rod Cameron speak from his imagination and intuition and will, therefore, evoke different feelings from each viewer. Cameron's images, each by double exposure, are a study in light and shadow, capturing the spirit of the matter. One image, titled "Second Self," depicts a figure wrapped in light, standing on a microscope with the ring Earth in the distance. The top half of the figure is white, the bottom half is transparent, illustrating a tension between shadow and reflection, a near and a far. The photograph evokes questions about what is more real: the physical or the spiritual?

Department of Education study addresses teacher, student performance

Good students had "intelligent" responses to "bright" tests, which categories are being placed, and are these assessments accurate? That's what a new study by the United States Department of Education sought to find out.

The study's three objectives were to document and analyze the key characteristics of performance assessment, conduct focus schools, the facilities and barriers to assessment reform, and the impact of performance assessments on teaching and learning.

Performance assessments are designed to measure student progress, hold school and teachers accountable for student achievement, certify student skills, and assess teacher effectiveness and instructional and curricular practices. Performance assessments are having an impact on teaching and learning.

Teachers are teaching "deeper" matter in more depth than previously. They have also cut back coverage of some areas.

Teachers emphasize teaching and performance based project work, writing skills, and group work.

Students are more eager to learn and are more engaged in the tasks they are performing.

Students are improving their writing skills and habits as a result of writing assignments completed for various tasks.

Students are gaining good reading and writing skills.

As they develop and implement assessment systems, school districts should:

- State clearly the purpose of the assessment.
- Match the format of the assessment system with the procedures of the assessment.
- Institute systematic procedures to ensure the technical quality of the assessment system.

Ensure that the performance assessment system, mixed different types of performance assessment, and scoring procedures.

Coordinate assessment reform with other elements of education reform.

Ensure that the structure of the system considers the length of time required for implementation change.

- Communicate the purposes of the system to the public.
- Provide and encourage positive development activities.
- Involve teachers in the design and implementation of the system.

Ensure that school provide teachers with time to develop assessments.

Provide waivers from testing and reporting requirements for schools experiencing difficulties in assessing their techniques.

The study is called "Assessing Student Performance: Revising the studies of education reform recently completed by the United States Department of Education. Authors: Robert L. Linn and Robert M. Glaser. Information from this and other studies in the series may be obtained by calling 1-800-421-6161.

Celebrating Catholic Schools Jan. 31-Feb. 5, 1999

We continue the theme of faith that makes Catholic schools and our relationship with God a reality, but this year we add a related dimension: the concept of hope. Where the virtues of faith and hope exist, then the third virtue, love, tends to find a home as well. Our schools provide living, daily proof. Moreover, Catholic schools restore the confidence — the faith — of the people in education. Catholic schools make a difference in the lives of our children: the well-being of everyone, and the future of a nation.

Web site involves students in the financial planning game

Ernst & Young LLP has announced Moneyopolis, a first-of-its-kind public service Web site designed as an educational tool to enhance math and financial planning skills among school children in grades six through eight. Ernst & Young developed and built the program as a financial planning game which takes place in the virtual city of Moneyopolis. The site is designed to support the U.S. Department of Education's goal of ensuring that all students master challenging mathematics, including the fundamentals of algebra and geometry, by the eighth grade so they are prepared for rigorous high school courses, college and careers.

Ernst & Young is demonstrating how the private sector can help prepare American students for higher education and beyond," said U.S. Secretary of Education Richard W. Riley. "Recent studies show that the mathematics achievement of U.S. middle and high school students falls below that of our major international competitors. Efforts such as these can make a positive difference in getting our students on the right track in math."

As a player enters the city of Moneyopolis, he or she is given "seed money" to get started. The player then visits the game's seven "centers" — Financial Planning, Job, Banking, Shopping, Education and Community Centers, and City Hall — to complete the activities inside. Each center presents different challenges as it teaches how to earn, save and spend money based on decisions the player must make. For example, in the Job Center, the player chooses one of four different jobs, like gardening. With the earnings, the player can go to the Banking Center to deposit the money in a savings account, or invest it in a mutual fund or stocks. Throughout the game, the player will see the pros and cons of the decisions they make. As they proceed through the game, students are also augmenting their reading, logic and computer use skills.

A player's score has two components: money earned and community service medals. As a player moves also volunteer time at the Community Center. A scorecard keeps track of the player's progress and saves the information so that students can make subsequent visits. After finishing the game, a student can customize and download a certificate recognizing his or her accomplishment.

Moneyopolis contains a section specifically for teachers that includes lesson plans, suggestions on how to use the site in the classroom, and tips to help prepare students for playing and doing homework at the site. All the activities in the game and the lessons plans meet the National Council of Teachers of Mathematics standards. A guide for teachers matches each problem to the corresponding standards. A financial planning curriculum with five activities is linked with the main curriculum.

The site contains additional activities and interactive for students and teachers, including a personal financial planning page students can use to keep track of their own money and save for special items, games, quizzes and articles that can be downloaded and printed. Links to other educational and financial planning Web sites, a glossary of financial planning terms, and a calculator students can use to answer the math questions.

Ernst & Young financial planning professionals, working with the Lightbeam Group, a Virginia-based company specializing in developing educational Web sites, developed content for Moneyopolis. Members of the development team includes a former national board member of NCTM, a curriculum development evaluator for the New York City Board of Education, the former head of product development at a computer curriculum company, a developer of Simyx and Schuster, and an award-winning Web site developer.

In addition, content was reviewed by NCTM members, math teachers and students, ensuring that content on the site was aligned with national math standards, with a final approval for teachers and parents approved.

Content was also developed by leading youth publications Kool! Wall Street News and Zillions magazine.

Study examines how schools are managed

What is the best way to manage schools? Research indicates decisions made closest to students are best. How do your schools fare?

For a more than three-year research for the United States Department of Education, studied schools in the United States, Canada and Australia to find out what makes school management work. The purpose of the research was to identify the conditions in schools that promote higher performance through SBM.

The finding from the research showed that creating schoolwide councils — typically the first step in getting SBM — will not automatically result in improved performance. In schools where SBM was working, researchers found the following similarities:

- The schools created multiple teacher-led teams that cut across a broad range of school-level commitments to involve them in all key decisions.
- Training for teachers and other staff was a high priority. Staff participated in training opportunities on a regular, ongoing basis.
- The schools used many ways to share information. They were systematic and creative in how they shared information with parents and the community.

Principals regularly recognized individuals for work well done, using various strategies such as "kudos on the spot" and notes of appreciation.

Principals played a key role in dispersing power and promoting a sense of ownership to learning and growth in skills and knowledge in explicit all teachers to participate in the work of the school, including information about student learning, and in distributing rewards.

The SBM worked better when adopted along with a set of curricular guidelines to provide direction for reform at the school.

Westfield students participate in expansive art education program

Westfield Public Schools has a long and proud tradition of excellence in art education. From Kindergarten through high school, students are provided with a complete "Disciplined-Based Arts Education," encompassing studio production, art history, art criticism and aesthetics. The arts must not be thought of as merely frivolous entertainment but as humanity. They are languages of civilization through which we express fears, anxieties, hungers, struggles and hopes.

During March, the school celebrates Youth Art Month with displays throughout the business district in downtown Westfield. The Spring Art Show in May features many works of art from approximately 1500 students who receive art training in the public school.

Westfield Public School art students are delighted to share works of art and creativity with the community and the families of the Children's Specialized Hospital in Mountainside, where works will be on display.

Because the artwork remains the personal property of the students, none will be sold.

Enrichment center fills a wide variety of student needs

The Enrichment Center, a full-service tutoring and enrichment center located at 424 Central Ave. in Westfield, announced that its Gifted and Talented courses of study have been expanded to include kindergarten, elementary and middle school students.

Hilma Sigal, co-owner of the center, said, "Many students are not eligible for the Gifted and Talented programs in schools, and parents have requested these classes. A decrease in school funding has forced many districts to limit or eliminate this needed programming."

Classes are offered for kindergarten through eighth grade for 10 weeks. Kindergarten through fifth grade students may choose reading, science, foreign language, creative writing and math. Students in middle school may take science, advanced math, physics, mock trials, and junior verbal and math SAT. All classes run for one hour and students may attend one or two consecutive hours. Private enrichment is also available.

Rhoda Asch, co-owner of center, said, "Parents who bring their child to The Enrichment Center are pleased to know that our teachers are always state-certified and specialized programming is tailored to the needs of the students. The child does not have to learn by learning at The Enrichment Center. The Enrichment Center adapts to the needs of the child."

Sigal said, "We believe that all children should be challenged and enriched. We want what is best for the child. Classes at The Enrichment Center are limited to eight students to provide individualized attention."

Gifted and Talented programs at The Enrichment Center will vary each semester to provide a myriad of educational experiences for these bright students.

The Enrichment Center is expanding its kindergarten programming due to overwhelming demand. Classes are offered on Saturday, Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, and run for 10 weeks. Phonics, reading, middle science and Spanish are all offered. A special K class is being offered for the kindergarten student who needs a greater challenge. This class is a precursor of academic subjects. The kindergarten program is a means of reintroducing the basics and creatively expanding the horizons for these young eager minds.

The kindergarten class offers classes and private tutoring for children from kindergarten through high school. Three-Waterbury, 1992 program brochures are available. Call The Enrichment Center at (908) 654-0111 to receive your copy of any of the brochures.

"Students are coming to us from Westfield, surrounding towns and from surrounding districts," said Asch. "The demand for class space is great, since the center's class size is only 10-18 students. Classes are offered Saturday through Thursday."

The center has a unique strategy about the SATs and the students taking the SATs.

"Students can always opt out of going to a class on any given day, but it's more difficult to find the time to attend a three-hour session," said Sigal. Classes run for one hour and are offered in math and verbal. Students don't have to take classes in both areas. With small class sizes, teachers are able to individualize during these classes.

They center also announces the expansion of its SAT II classes. Recognizing that children are unique in their focus and learning styles, the center responds with popular and effective SAT II preparation. Classes are offered Saturday through Thursday during the maximum flexibility in scheduling. Individualized instruction is guaranteed as there are only four to six students in each class. While most students benefit from instruction and practice in both the math and verbal areas, some students choose to concentrate on just verbal or math. Students pay as they go so as not to burden parents financially.

Flexibility in scheduling is crucial for teenagers. Three-hour classes are difficult to squeeze into a schedule filled with commitments to school, extracurricular activities, and jobs. The center's classes are one hour in length and are easily scheduled to fit into busy lives.

Many students begin SAT preparation in tenth grade, sometimes beginning as early as seventh or as late as 12th grade. The on-going classes allow students to determine how many weeks a session should be, but as practice improves skills in sports, chess and drama, the center's results show that students who practice their techniques and strategies improve their scores.

The center is also pleased to offer intensive preparation classes for the SAT II tests offered by the College Board.

These tests are subject specific, and are similar to the former achievement tests. Sigal said, "We are offering four week, eight-hour classes for the SAT II in molecular biology, planetary science, history, U.S. and world, foreign languages and math. We recommend that 9th and 10th graders take the biology or chemistry tests. It is important for students to take these subject tests at the end of the school year in which they have taken the subject. Many colleges require students to submit scores for these of the SAT II tests in addition to their SAT I test scores.

All of these courses will be taught by state-certified and experienced teachers. Each class is limited to eight students to maximize the learning experience. The classes will run for four Saturdays: May 2, 9, 16 and 23. The classes are each two hours long. Students may choose 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. or 2:30 to 4:30 p.m. long classes. Students who wish to take two classes will be accommodated. Attendance both in morning and evening sessions is the same. The dates of the classes are in convenient classes can be selected with a minimum of four students. The center also arranges private tutoring sessions.

The center still has spaces available in most of its Winter/Spring classes, which will be starting within the next two weeks. Several classes are already filled and additional sections are being added.

A sample of the elementary classes being offered by Motion, Magnets and Machinery, one of many science courses: phonics/reading on various levels; Spanish; creative kindergarten classes including math, science and reading; math for every level student; multiple gifted and talented and several gifted-only sections; and creative writing.

For middle school students, the center's GED preparation classes in math and English will have a new spin upon the regular gifted and talented classes for middle school include Mock Trials, Physics for Fun, Analogies and Mental Math.

Call center to determine if your child qualifies for these classes. Study skills, test-taking skills, junior SAT, and other challenging and exciting classes are available for students who are eager to learn.

A new individual program beginning immediately, S.O.S., or Student Over-All Support, is available for all grades. This individual program is geared to the student, whether ADHD, in need of remediation or just working up to potential. The center's certified and experienced speciality teachers are able to help eliminate problem students, self-work, outbursts.

Asch said, "It is difficult at times for one person to teach all grades and all subjects well, we employ elementary, middle and high school teachers who have specialties in their subjects and grades to meet the learning requirements of all students."

The new S.O.S. program includes study skills, organizational skills, homework help, confidence building, time management skills, test-taking skills, math skills and writing skills.

Regular updates available by state certified teachers on all subjects and all levels, including honors and Advanced Placement courses. Teachers will use the student's text as well as supplemental materials.

Separate myth from reality concerning college choices

Students and families need a lot of information to navigate the confusing and often overwhelming process of selecting a college and securing financial aid. A look at some of the commonly-held myths -- and the appropriate reality -- will help you separate fact from fiction. You'll often be one step ahead of the game in choosing and paying for the college that is right for you.

Myth: You should go to college only if you are certain of your career goals.

Reality: Even if you are unsure of your career path, you should continue your education to discover new interests and talents. By 2000, most United States jobs will require college or other post-secondary education. Workers with college degrees have a lower unemployment rate than high school graduates and may earn for $500,000 more in their lifetime, plus those with high school degrees.

Myth: Financial aid is only available if you are poor.

Reality: Remember, financial aid consists of "gift aid," scholarships and grants, and "self-help aid," employment and loans. While much gift aid is limited to students demonstrating exceptional capability of financial need, self-help aid is widely available. Part-time students can find part-time employment either on or off campus. Also, many college loans are available regardless of family income and assets.

Myth: Each college's financial aid award package will be the same.

Reality: Financial aid awards from different colleges usually vary significantly, both in the amount and the type of aid offered. College costs and resources, and a university's policy of awarding financial aid, account for most differences. Some colleges include home equity and retirement fund balances when determining eligibility for institutional aid.

Myth: Without enough cash for tuition, you cannot attend college.

Reality: You can reduce expenses by commuting to a local college to earn a two- or four-year degree.

attending a community college for two years and transferring to a four-year school, choosing cooperative education or working for an employer who offers tuition reimbursement. You may participate in advanced study programs to earn college credit while still in high school. With research, you will find a large variety of resources to help you afford college.

Students and parents who want to learn more about the financial aid process can call Key Education Resources at (800) KEY-LEND.

HEALTHY LIVING

EPA sets new standards for the air we breathe

The lungs constant interaction with the environment — the air we breathe — makes the impact of that environment inescapable. How well, or how poorly, our lungs perform depends directly on the state of the air around us. And air pollution, we have realized, has come to signify not only the condition of the air outside our homes and workplaces but that of the atmosphere within, as well.

Most abundant — outdoor — air pollution stems from industrial and automotive sources of combustion. In the 1980s, there was a troubling drop in ozone of air pollution's major components between 1986 and 1995, lead emissions fell by 32 percent, during essentially the same time period, smaller decreases in emissions of sulfur dioxide, 18 percent, particulate matter, 18 percent, volatile organic compounds 9 percent, and nitrogen dioxide, 3 percent, were observed.

Ozone pollution is of particular concern because ozone is a little-understood, despite frequent references to it, ozone is a variant of oxygen — O₃ rather than O₂ — classed, as a photochemical, because it is created by the action of sunlight. Most news stories have warned of a hazardous lack of ozone, saying drops in the ozone layer. Levels 50 miles above the earth's surface, layers permitting penetration by deadly levels of ultraviolet radiation, implicated as a cause of cancer and a threat of skin cancer. But ozone poses a peril at ground level, as well. In fact, our nation's most widespread air pollution problem.

In the troposphere, that part of the atmosphere in which we live and must breathe, "standard" oxygen is what we need. When sunlight acts on such hydrocarbons and industrial and automotive activity as hydrocarbons and nitrogen oxides, ozone is created in the form of an intensely irritating gas which can have devastating effects on respiration, penetrating lung damage similar to that caused by cigarette smoking. Tissues in the walls of airways become inflamed and swollen, scarring develops, and breathing capacity is diminished. In the short term, ozone causes both diminished lung capacity and lowered lung defenses, increasing the susceptibility to infection.

Among recent scientific reports concern National Ambient Air Quality Standards for ozone draw the line at 0.12 parts per million. In 1995, an estimated 200 million U.S. residents lived in counties classified by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency as having air quality that violated the national standards for ozone. In some parts of the country, levels can at times approach twice the federal health standard. Healthy, non-smoking adults exposed to such concentrations for two hours responded with acute inflammation of the lungs and blood vessels.

Level ozone levels well below the official accepted may be hazardous to especially vulnerable groups, especially young children, non-smoking adults, and those with chronic respiratory ailments. An extensive 1993 review of the medical literature concluded that the primary standard for ozone is "in the margin of safety" against short-term adverse effects and the standard may also be inadequate to protect the public from risks resulting from chronic exposure. A Dutch study of young, healthy cyclists reported in 1994 in the American Lung Association publication, American Journal of Respiratory and Critical Care Medicine, correlated shortness of breath, chest tightness and wheezing with ozone levels less than half the official danger level.

Children are at even greater risk because they breathe in more air per pound of body weight, they spend more time outdoors and they're less likely to be aware of warning signs. Pathway to function in a group of more than 150 fifth and sixth graders, measured over a two-month period, showed marked deficits correlated with ozone levels the maximum concentration during the study period was 78 ppb.

A report published by the American Lung Association in 1995,

Jose Muniz, owner of Inner Health Therapeutic Massage in Elizabeth.

Massage therapist opens new clinic in Elizabeth

Jose Muniz, a member of the American Massage Therapy Association, began Inner Health Therapeutic Massage in November, 1998, serving the community of Elizabeth. The therapeutic benefits of massage therapy, as a form of healing and relaxation, has been a part of our country's history, can benefit from a professional massage. Cerebral palsy league strives to meet community needs

The Cerebral Palsy League, was founded by a group of concerned and dedicated residents of Union County in 1948. The primary purpose was to establish a treatment center in which persons with cerebral palsy could access needed rehabilitation services. The first center was opened in Elizabeth, where it operated for 16 years.

In 1961, the league moved into a larger facility in Truxton. The program was designed to meet the needs of children with cerebral palsy as well as adults with other developmental disabilities.

By the early 1970s, the Cerebral Palsy League had outgrown its Truxton site and completed the construction of a new, four-story, modern building at 373 Clemens Terrace in Union by 1975. This building has been expanded and improved in recent years and is a fully utilized facility.

The league realized that it needed more physical space in order to expand its programs and services.

Partnerships for People seeks companions for disabled individuals

Partnerships for People is recruiting volunteers to serve as companions to individuals with developmental disabilities through the program. Help an individual become an active member of the community and offer the gift of friendship eight hours a month.

"Simply by spending time with an individual, taking them shopping, attending church or temple services together, or enjoying a whole host of recreational or community activities, volunteers can make a tremendous difference in someone's life," said Michelle Barker, coordinator of Self-Determination at Partnerships for People. "What better way to begin the New Year than by committing to making a positive difference in someone's life?"

Partnerships for People, a non-profit agency which has been providing residential, vocational and case management services for individuals with disabilities since 1983, provides an in-depth training program for the volunteer-client match. Volunteers will be trained on the person-centered approach to working with individuals with developmental disabilities, as well as an overview of disabilities.

"Our mission at Partnerships for People is to provide person-centered services which enable individuals with disabilities to be active members of our communities," said Barker.

CHIROPRACTIC
FOR BETTER HEALTH

DR. DONALD ANTONELLI
CHIROPRACTOR

A PAIN IN THE NECK

If you have a pain in the neck, you may be astonished to find the source of the pain isn't really in your neck at all, but rather down your spinal column. That's one reason why the doctor or chiropractor will examine your entire spine to find where the problem may be. When your spinal column is moving either in physical activity, such as walking or even when you're breathing, there's a synergistic effect at work in other words, the upper part of your spine is interacting with the lower part. An injury to your lower spine may be slight but you're really not aware of it. But it may be putting unusual pressure on the upper part of your spine. That may be the cause of the neck pain.

Your spinal column, from top to bottom, should be supported, aligned, and in good working order for you to feel well. Any weakness, such as nerve, disc, and joint pain, will affect your ability to work or enjoy your life. Chiropractic is a non-surgical, drug-free, and safe way to correct these problems. Chiropractors use their hands to adjust the spine, which helps to restore the natural balance of the spine. This helps to relieve the pressure on the nerves and joints, which can cause pain and discomfort. Chiropractic is a safe and effective way to improve your health and well-being.
