To schedule the workshop, call Mervi Corsover at (973) 301-1911 immediately as it must take place by July 1 and Dec. 15.

World War II Navy veteran Stanley Wnek speaks before a class at Gaudineer School Friday. Wnek, a supporter of the Springfield Memorial Day Parade, donated a commemorative book about the Veterans of Foreign Wars to the school library.

Township plans activities for Memorial observance

Memorial Day observances started early in Springfield Friday. Resident Stanley Wnek donated a copy of the Veterans of Foreign Wars centennial history book to the Gaudineer School, and talked about his World War II experiences before two library classes.

"I think it's important for our children to learn what veterans have done for our country," Wnek said. "One key is to talk with them and to donate copies of the just-published VFW book to the Gaudineer, Jonathan Dalton and Springfield Public libraries."

Wnek, in his United States Navy Lt. dress uniform, talked about how a young man from Irvington wound up fighting in the European and Pacific theaters of World War II. He recalled his first impressions of Memorial Day.

"I looked forward to the parade in town," Wnek said. "It was the Great Depression, where not many people could afford to go to the show. The parade did well."

Wnek, in the late 1930s, was deciding whether to play professional baseball or enter college. While trying out in a Yankees minor league club, per the advice of his coaches, he agreed on a university.

The graduate, Mr. Pearl Harbor, changed that and signed a sign afterward, Wnek said. "The Navy allowed me an education of different places and cultures. I learned geography and that the United States of America is the best country in the world."

When asked about changes of the Memorial Day holiday since World War II, Wnek shook his head.

"There are fewer people attending," Wnek said. "Part of the problem is that our World War II veterans are dying every day. It's to where there are more people in the parade than watching."

Wnek and his fellow veterans are trying to counter the trend. An outreach to the schools by Wnek, Edith Smith of the American Legion and Guy Haworth of Post 140 have talked before students before Memorial and Veterans days for the last two years.

Smith and Wnek are members of the Springfield Veterans Alliance, which conducts the annual ceremonies and parades. The day begins with a memorial at the Springfield Fire Headquarters at the corner of Caldwell Place and North Triquet Avenue at 10 a.m., followed by a service at Veterans Memorial Park at the corner of Mountain Avenue and Shumate Road at about 8:30 a.m.

The parade itself starts at 10 a.m. at the Walton School, and ends at the Municipal Building lawn. A short ceremony there concludes the observance.

At 12 p.m. on May 27, an additional primary class opened, which makes the total student enrollment 19. The projected total student enrollment for the DL Center Springfield is 36 students.

Components of the program offered at the DL Center Springfield include speech and language therapy, occupational therapy, adaptive physical education, music and art. In addition, students eight years and older participate in vocational education.

Jennifer Halloran, vocational education teacher, works with students individually; as well as in a group. She works on skills such as collating, folding paper in thirds, stuffing envelopes and sorting by color, size, category and number. The students also work on mastering domestic skills such as washing and setting the table, sweeping, vacuuming, folding clothes and washing dishes.

Developmental Center finds success at Gaudineer

In September, the Florence M. Gaudineer School in Springfield opened its doors to the Morris Union Jointure Commission.

The Developmental Learning Center Springfield is the fourth facility that the Morris Union Jointure Commission opened since September 1990. The other three facilities are located in New Providence, Mountainside, and Kenilworth. All four programs provide specialized services to students classified as autistic or who exhibit autistic behaviors.

The DL Center Springfield is located in the rear wing of the Gaudineer School. This area has been organized to include six classrooms, a staff lounge and a main office. The 1988-89 school year for the DL Center Springfield opened with 17 students ranging in ages from five to 12. The first four classes to open were two primary classes, ages five to eight, and two intermediate classes, ages nine to 12.

Gymnastics requires support from Sablosky family

Sablosky was the only gymnast in the competition to perform a backflip with a full twist twice in the same routine. On the uneven bars, she performed a back flip release from the high bar to the low bar, a signature move of famed gymnast Nadia Comaneci, that Sablosky learned in about three weeks.

Sablosky is far enough advanced to compete with 11- and 12-year-olds. This is her second year of competition, as children are not allowed to compete until the age of eight.

She began her training at age five with Jim Surgent, coach of Olympic team member Dominick Minicucci. Surgent's son, DJ, along with Henk now coaches Sablosky.

"She was always just jumping up and down," Sablosky's mom, Alyssa Sablosky, said. "We used to say if she had a tail she'd swing from it."

"I started doing back hand springs when I was five," Sablosky said.

A bright, smiling, athletic girl, Sablosky practices个性地 along with physical skill. She enjoys what she does and it shows in her face and her movements when she gets about it.

The kids all embrace each other, here despite their age differences. Alyssa Sablosky said: "Where else can she be involved with 12-year-olds and be accepted? In a way, this is an education for her."

"A common sight in the household is Alyssa's mom describing it is that 'her gymnast daughter stands at the door with her mom, saying, 'I'm ready to go!'"

Sablosky's pretties, Alyssa Surgent's seem to be a family affair. Her dad was there, along with her mom, her mother Jeffrey, age five, and her sister,

Jayne, 13. No one seemed to mind one bit about being there, "watching Sablosky work seriously at her craft — and she is serious."

"There's always a little sense of fear in gymnastics," her mom said. "Otherwise, you can get reckless. Andie doesn't get reckless."

Wasted opportunity

When opportunity knocks, you need to open the door. Or at least look through the peephole. Neither Springfield nor Mountaintide bothered to get off the couch.

This time, opportunity arrived in the form of a Union County grant program that offered a piece of $5 million to help its towns improve their central business districts. The funding, provided by "Project Downtown Union County," will be divided during the next month among the 14 municipalities that applied.

How much will Springfield or Mountaintide receive? Zero.

Residents in these municipalities, especially in Springfield, complain that their downtown district is not comparable to the downtowns of neighboring communities. Money from this Union County grant could have vastly improved the township's business area. At the very least, funding from the county could have served as a starting point to let the downtown improvement horses out of their gates.

The responsibility lies with the mayor, the Township Committee or Borough Council and the business administrator to complete these applications, to strive for the best for their community. Why did they shirk this responsibility?

Only Elizabeth and Linden were not eligible for the grant because they had received previous funds. Springfield and Mountaintide seem like ideal candidates. Now they will not even be considered.

Now, shoppers, rather than stopping in Springfield, will continue traveling along Morris Avenue to Summit to visit a real downtown area. And Summit can only improve, as the city is looking to use whatever grant money it receives to continue its downtown improvement project. Now, potential Mountaintide shoppers will continue toward Westfield and Cranford.

It is possible that there will be another round for applications due by Sept. 15. If opportunity knocks again, at least take a look outside the door.

Lest we forget

We will observe Memorial Day on Monday. This day seems to have lost some of its original meaning. Many shore business owners and other tourism-related merchants consider it the kick-off to the summer season. Students consider it a benchmark to count the last days until graduation or the end of the school year. Many workers view it as a three-day weekend.

The lack of significance given by the public to this holiday could be due to several reasons. World War II and Korean War veterans are growing old and dying, and Vietnam veterans, who are well into middle age, do not become as active in veterans' organizations as their predecessors.

"When Saving Private Ryan" was released in theaters last summer, a new generation was awed by the carnage and sacrifice of Allied soldiers during D-Day. Many people also view World War II as "the last good war" where America's goals and enemies seemed clear-cut. The subsequent conflicts in Korea, Vietnam and Iraq were more controversial among the American public, and the outcomes less successful.

The controversial nature of a war should not lessen our respect and appreciation for those who made the ultimate sacrifice. Many of those who died in these conflicts were barely in their 20s. Their lives were cut short before they had the chance to further their educations, begin their careers, get married and have children. They put their country ahead of their personal safety and dreams. This sort of patriotism and commitment must never be taken lightly.

With advances in military technology and live television coverage of wars, such as Desert Storm and in Kosovo, it seems that weapons overshadow the soldiers who use them. We watch in amazement as a smart-bomb travels down a chimney in Iraq. Our appreciation of the improvement in weapons should never mean more to us than the military personnel who risk their safety to protect American lives and interests.

Veterans groups in different towns will be holding various Memorial Day tributes. Some will hold parades with school groups and other community organizations taking part. Others will visit graveyards to place wreaths or hold simple services to pay respect to their fallen comrades. We urge all residents, even if they cannot attend these ceremonies, to set aside some time during the day to remember those who have died on the battlefield.

We also urge all residents to remember our veterans, those living and dead, year-round by flying the flag from the front of their homes.

As the saying goes, "Lest we forget."

"Freedom rings where opinions clash. Every man has a right to be heard."

Trash on roadways spoils scenic splendor

As I
See It

By Norman Rauscher

It was not too many years ago that when the spring breezes blew, the family took to the automobile to take to the back roads to see spring and the forthcoming summer in all its glory.

While it's still possible to take what country roads are left, the pristine countryside is not so pristine any more.

These country roads, yes, also the city and suburban streets, are littered with debris.

Nowadays, if one can survive the fumes of the diesel trucks and the lack of views from the latest in sport utility vehicles, it takes no great observer of nature to find that the roads are littered with debris.

Just recently, one of Summit's schools took on the task of cleaning up one stretch of local road. They were surprised to learn that not only was the debris just plain junk, but much of it was recyclable material, which youths had no sense to turn over for reuse.

Others have not been aware of the debris problem. At least one real estate agency, a large one, albeit, has spent some years promising to clean up certain roadways in the state. And, on a regular basis, you will see these brave souls evading the onslaught of traffic to bring cleanliness to the roadways they have promised to clean up.

But, all these positive efforts do not reach the core of the problem. The roads are vary lined with beer and soda cans, from fast food wrappers to candy bars, and whatever coffee cups have not been thrown into the back seat.

Even worse than the debris consisting of empties cans and coffee cups are those people who find cigarette trays overflowing. What could be more distressing than walking through the supermarket parking lot, complete with an overloaded grocery cart, and find your way blocked by a pile of cigarette butts?

Of course, the big offenders do not use market lots, where they may be observed; they take to the open road, pull over and then deliberately dump everything that can be called debris, including cigarette butts, onto what was the pristine countryside.

This discarding of debris on public streets and highways is symptomatic of a throw-away society. Everything we use nowadays appears to be disposable. Go into any shop for anting, and in item will be wrapped — not in something which will last just until you get it home, if you're lucky.

But, while the wrapping goods may be shoddy, there's no excuse for using the public highway as the garbage dump or excuse for recycling centers.

Unfortunately, many of these items are not recyclable. They will stay in the waste stream for many a moon, no matter what happens to them.

In suburban communities, great pride is taken on the proper planting, the appropriate bushes, the correct trees, many of them flowering wonders. But all this is marred by the debris which lines the base of these natural wonders.

Watch carefully and you will see parents casually dismantling items along the roads, with the children watching, and then will wonder why their children turn out to be slobs. We talk about role models, but evidently that phrase does not apply to behavior related to material goods.

Other countries where the people are not so well off do not discard along the roads. They use and reuse and treasure what they have. We talk about role models, but evidently that phrase does not apply to behavior related to material goods.

We wonder if the homes of these slobs are just as covered with debris as our roadways. Maybe, maybe not. But, in any case, we don't have to look at their homes, but we sure do have to wade through their discarded on the public roads and streets.

Creative arts are necessities, not luxuries

There's no such thing as an independent subject. Any subject of study in any school curriculum has a thread linking it to another. The arts are similarly tied, although many educators and parents often dismiss painting or dance or theater as isolated activities — or worse, luxuries, something enriching but not fundamentally vital.

Arts, by definition, are things we can get along without. Manufactured luxuries — the arts, whether popular or not, are clearly necessities, they weren't they wouldn't be necessary. Where it doesn't matter if it's Michelangelo's "Last Judgment" or a summer blockbuster movie, they're great art, but they're not necessities.

They're not necessities because they're not necessities.

For children, the arts do two things with exceptional brilliance. They give them a chance to experience the world from various perspectives, and they alert them to new and different subjects. I don't need to argue very hard on the latter point. If you can recognize the difference between "Battle of the Bulge" and "Henry V," then you understand exactly what I'm talking about.

By extension, a variation of subject matter equals a variation of feeling. It's impossible for a "World War II" movie and a film based on a play by Shakespeare to offer the same kind of emotional experience. Film — or any art for that matter — offers an emotional trip. There's no arguing it. We go to movies or the theater, or watch television or look at paintings to get emotional experiences out of them.

If you're going to make something, you're going to have to project a feeling, and to do that, you have to vary your perspective. You can't stand in one spot; you have to look at the subject from numerous angles to understand it completely. In life, we're not always willing to do that. In art, it's necessary.

In these current difficulties, with school boards talking so frequently of getting kids to improve their communication and peer mediation skills, it would be wise for them to also examine the depth, or lack of depth, in their arts programs. Empathy and exposure to the great variety of the world's people and subject matter are more likely to come to kids through the production and viewing of creative work than through lectures.

The communication programs proposed by the school boards are crucial and most definitely should be instituted. But the boards, as well as the parents, need to recognize that the creative arts show much more of the world than most of us realize.

In your living room wall, coming out of your radio, quite possibly stuck to your refrigerator or tacked to the board above your desk. You can barely turn around without finding some example, some product, of someone's creative exploit.

Absence shows lack of concern

To the Editor:

I recently had the opportunity to participate, along with my students, in the Youth Summit on Violence held at The College of New Jersey by the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey.

This is a program which began in the fall with the selection of specific school districts and specific students within those districts. The students who were interviewed and selected based on their ability to present their ideas and communicate with students from diverse backgrounds worked very hard and took this topic very seriously.

Although this process began before the Colorado shootings, it took on additional meaning in light of that massacre. My students, who are mostly urban and not used to public speaking or interacting with policy makers, were both bemused and impressed. They did, however, make me proud and more importantly, they're proud of themselves.

We hope that after all of their hard work, the policy makers will take the time to make their suggestions a reality. The concern that they expressed along with those of educators, counselors, physicians and clergy from around the state, were valid and sincere.

My greatest concern is that they were exposed to a panel that did not include our state governor, Christine Todd Whitman. A young man, Brian, from Princeton

High School, asked, "Where is our governor, and what could she possibly have to do today that is more important than talking to students about their fears regarding youth violence?"

Well, as an adult in that audience, when the crowd stood to cheer this young man's comment, I felt great sadness. His words were golden because they were so simply asked. What possibly could have been more important?

We — students, educators, counselors, physicians, clergy — left very busy schedules to accommodate the need for discussion regarding these issues. Yet, Whitman did not attend. A very sad statement regarding her priorities, I feel.

Perhaps Whitman has some explanation as to her whereabouts. When the question was asked, the secretary of state said that he called her and she asked where he was. Is that supposed to make us feel better?

The fact that this summit was not a priority to her and in fact she did not know where her appointees were just shows me again how out of touch Whitman is and has always been with the needs of our state's children.

We all hoped that our work was not in vain, however again, it seemed that this was a political opportunity that made high interest news and career advancement, yet, giving no real bearing on the educational, health or judicial policies that our governor intends to stand behind.

LETTER TO THE EDITORFreeholders' pats are short sighted

To the Editor:

Yikes!

I am all choked up over another stellar effort by the Union County Board of Freeholders, and certainly share the immense pride that they have in their ability to spend $285 million of our money.

Let's face it: reducing the county tax in H towns was quite a feat, but it was raised in 10 towns. No matter, the board was busy, not only in self-congratulation, but in a pat on the head of the Finance Committee for finding out "what could be cut."

Did they consider the take-home vehicles for which we pick up the local, once tab? I guess not. How about those pay raises? No. How about jobs for friends and relatives? Nah.

On March 15, several Oratory students took the National Latin Examination with astonishing results. Around 100 students at Roseland received a gold medal with a Summa Cum Laude commendation for scoring 37 out of a possible 40 points.

Likewise, Martin Ryan of Gladstone received a silver medal with a Magna Cum Laude commendation for scoring 36 points out of a possible 40.

In addition, Jeffrey Dieterle and Ryan Frank, both of Union, each received Magna Cum Laude commendations. The following students also received Cum Laude recognition for scoring above the national average: Michael Cunningham of Cranford; Michael Cannino of Union; Christopher Daly of Springfield; Stephen DeMena of Plainfield; Stephen Malcolm of Springfield; and Ryan O'Connell of West Orange.

Surprised scholars celebrate achievement

By Walter Elliott
Staff Writer

Five of Springfield's 15 and Summit's brightest high school seniors found themselves sharing breakfast with their respective principals and school district superintendents Tuesday morning. They had no idea the would-be L'Affaire in Mountain side until Friday.

"I was called into the guidance counselor's office, where I was told about the breakfast," said Amanda Ahlers of Summit said. "Then I go an invitation in the mail."

"I got a letter in the mail first," said Springfield's Linda Chernoff. "Then our principal told me."

Cherish, Ethan Springfield's Scott Sambur, Ahlers and Summit classmate Sanders Kleinfield and Mansie Kellogg were the only surprised recipients.

They and 15 other top seniors plus their respective parents and principals were feted by the Superintendents' Roundtable of Union County. The roundtable has hosted a breakfast for outstanding high school scholars from 30 districts for 14 years.

"This is a great occasion," Union County Superintendent of Schools Frances Lebow said. "We take time out to honor the top two scholars in each of our public high schools."

The breakfast is for the schools' valedictorians and salutatorians. Summer Superintendent of Schools Michael Knowlton said, "It's an opportunity to show our appreciation for the hard work they've done."

"This is also a time to show my appreciation of the parents," Springfield Superintendent of Schools Gary Friedland added. "They are the child's first teachers, who set up an environment for learning. As a parent of two children myself, I understand the work and support you show."

Members of the Superintendents' Roundtable, said Friedland and Lebow, meet monthly to discuss mutual subjects. The group has been around as long as the county superintendent's office.

Arboretum offers 'Garden Weekend'

New Providence private Gardens will be on view for the first time during "A Garden Weekend," a two-day tour of six private gardens June 11-12 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., combined with a June 11 evening supper-buffet and auction, all to benefit the Reeves-Reed Arboretum in Summit.

Tuesday is the deadline for $15 advance-tour tickets for both days, rain or shine. Other gardens are at Summit and Short Hills.

Parks, perennial blossoming sequentially in sun or shade adapt to each of the gardens in imaginative groupings that produce an astounding variety relative to the allotted and sometimes limited spaces.

One of the two New Providence gardens is located along the banks of the Passaic River, complementing an 1860s former ice house and featuring more than 200 feet of mixed borders, woodland shade plantings and herbaceous covering established trellis.

The second tour is a formal-contemporary accompanying a 1910s house where mixed borders, a formal rose bed, vegetable, strawberry and herb gardens, fruit trees and roses rambling over fences occupy every conceivable space.

Three Summit gardens and one in Short Hills continue the perennial scheme that highlights species or specimen plants. In one of Summit's three, a portion of the garden area 1918 Colonial Revival house was said to be partially designed by eminent New York landscape architect Elmer Eddie Chapman who directed a plan in 1924 for a garden recently restored at the Reeves-Reed.

Renovations on this private project created a patio and shade and pasture gardens enclosed by a field-stone and brick masonry wall. Towering over is an exemplary Amur cork tree.

On the corner, a 1920s Summit garden and house were recently expanded and modified using a new and hemlock-clipped hedge and vine-covered trellises to extend privacy for the new patio and pool; while an informal cottage garden spills out and lush perennials border the front and sides of the house. A specimen Japanese cedar is particularly noteworthy.

Some 18 years ago, the owners of the third Summit property added to the house and created a small but sun-filled courtyard where perennials and border shrubs must be strictly held in scale. A prized Suga tree at a corner and a "Experimentum" is carried out with herbs, perennials and cottage roses.

On the circa 1930 Short Hills property, once comprised only of perimeter trees, foundation shrubs and lawn, the owners created a landscape that now encompasses flowering shrubs, perennials, birch and shade, rhubarb, roses and Japanese maples. Each year more lawn is converted to plant beds. Climbing roses and clematis blow together over a wooden arch and a climbing hydrangea. Stylized topiary deck railing, specimen red birches, shrub hostas fill a sunny border.

Participants about town Andy Tark of Summit will preside over the five auction preceded by a silent version. Most plants are by local professional growers or experienced gardeners, as suitable for suburban gardens. Among the selections are Red Nurseries' new "Red Jade" weeping crabapple that grows to just 15 feet, and Durbin Nurseries' new smaller and showy cultivar, a tricolor European beech tree with pink foliage edged in pink and rose.

For the silent auction, Terry Firth of Sunlight will offer a pair of her well-known "windmill" orchids in bloom. Three sizes of chocolate mandarin hair ferns were purchased at Gardens in the Woods, May, including the unusual dwarf variety. Many other plants will be on display.

Tickets for the buffet, starting at 6:30 p.m. and the auction, beginning at 7:30 p.m., are $50. The buffet alone costs $50. Tour tickets after Tuesday are $20.

Licketholders also may enjoy the perennial border's flora of blooms at the Reeves-Reed Arboretum, 105 Hobart Ave., a preserve now in its 25th year.

Reeves-Reed "Garden Weekend" volunteers assisting Chapman and Sunlight are Mary Liz Lewis, Laura Smith, Alison Ellen Donovan, Debora G. Gates, Karen Jones, Judy Tschirhart, Terri Taggart, Carol Towne, and Brooke Travelstead, all of Summit, and arboretum administrative assistant Joan Ryder of Springfield.

This program, which is presented annually, encourages summer reading by children and their families. It is open to Summit children, both readers and non-readers alike. They can participate even if they are away during the summer. Each participant receives a book bag to keep track of the hours read.

Various incentives are earned for time read. These include such things as, bookmarks, pencils, stickers and water bottles. In addition, for each book read, a child can help decorate for the children's room! All children who participate are invited to march with the children's librarians in the Summit Centennial Parade Sept. 26.

The kick-off for the summer reading program will be storytime with Mrs. Wheless, with a program of stories with a local futuristic theme. These will include tales about the Chaitnah stack and the library ghost. Along with her, Ben Ben, she will perform their original song, "Summer, Summer, Blues."

This program, which is for children kindergarten through fifth grade, will be June 19, from 1 to 2 p.m. at the library. Pre-registration is required and may be done in person at the library or by calling 237-4230.

Registration also will begin June 19 for several programs being offered to children, kindergarten through fifth grade, as part of the general summer reading program. On July 2 at 1 p.m. the children's librarian will be doing a craft program with a theme of "100 Things."

On July 14 from 1 to 3 p.m. local author and craftsperson Tina Casey will be offering a program titled "The Marvelous Patchwork of Summit" where kids can make self portraits. Each child will assemble into a quilt to display in the library. At the end of summer, the quilt will be taken apart for the kids to take home.

Matters of perception

Fairfield University sophomore Laura Kelly of Summit presents her art work selected to appear in the studio art exhibition, "Matters of Perception," at the Thomas J. Walsh Art Gallery in Connecticut. This painting, "Still Life with Pots and Balls," is a modernistic oil painting she created.

Novartis mentors achievers

A number of Novartis Pharmacueticals employees selected their time and expense with the YMCA's Black Achievers Program during the students' spring break. The week-long program gave them a look at corporate workplace development opportunities available in the pharmaceutical industry and offered career guidance.

Through YMCA's Corporate Partnerships YMCA Outreach Services director Adrienne Hawkins, YMCA's sales consultant and a member of the Summit Area YMCA Board of Trustees, played a key role in matching individual black mentors from Novartis with each of the students.

Activities began with an orientation for mentors and students. Week-long activities included each mentor spending a day with the students in his or her work area, field-trips to doctor's offices, hospitals with sales representatives, touring manufacturing plants and finally sharing with each other their experiences and newly acquired knowledge, especially comparing students' interests and mentors' jobs.

Matching the YMCA's Black Achievers Program with Novartis is part of an effort to encourage the development of minority students through corporate mentoring. The goal of the Black Achievers Program is to develop and pursue education and career opportunities for children ages 12 through 17 with the assistance and guidance of minority professionals from a variety of career fields and job backgrounds.

It also is to strengthen minority education in Summit, to provide youths with opportunities and resources to which they may not otherwise have access, and to acknowledge the achievements of black community leaders.

For more information on the Black Achievers Corporate Mentoring Program or any Summit Area YMCA Outreach Services Programs, call Cromwell at 237-3130.

LaBarca Football Clinic is an attraction

By Andrew McGann

Assistant Sports Editor

The Frank LaBarca Memorial Football Clinic, which annually draws a cross-section of more than 200 New Jersey high school football coaches and nearly 75 Division I-A and AA college coaches from across the country, was held at Arthur E. Johnson High School in Clark last Thursday.

The clinic, which was formerly held at Brearley High School in Kenilworth and has been in existence since the late LaBarca died in 1979, provides high school coaches with a forum in which they can exchange ideas and information with their college counterparts and also gives them the opportunity to discuss some of their top recruits and show video tapes of those players.

"It's like a great way for coaches to meet and interact with one other," said committee member and Roselle Park High School head football coach John Wagner, who has been affiliated with the clinic for the past six years. "We always bring in some really good people."

Monmouth head coach Kevin Calahan and Syracuse head man Paul Pascual kicked off the day by speaking on their areas of expertise, after which an awards dinner was held where Rutgers Director of Athletics Bob Mulcahy and Caldwell coach Mark Collins were honored.

New York City head football coach Nick Saban and New York Jets assistant coach Charlie Weis also spoke later in the evening.

LaBarca was born in Newark and coached in Middlesex County before his passing. His son, Chip, the head coach at Lakewood, is heavily involved in the clinic, as is Johnson head coach Bob Taylor, who played high school football with the elder LaBarca at West Side in Newark.

Taylor, who has led the Cougars to the state playoffs in four of his first six years at Johnson, has been an integral part of the clinic since its inception and has done his part in ensuring its continuance.

"Frank was a unique guy who loved football and loved to coach," said Taylor, who is one of the LaBarca's chief assistants along with Andy Durso, Ron Sin Filippo, Al Rotella and Frank Botteri. "He had a great impact in showing us a better way to communicate with each other. He used to do that all by himself and it's taken over what I replace him."

The LaBarca Clinic is a real commitment for me and my staff, but we're very happy to be a part of it. It's been great for both the coaches and the game and that in turn has had a profound impact on the players."

The following are the results of the clinic's 10th consecutive year:

Gaudineer 26, Orsery 1 (May 14): Dean Charchuk pitched five scoreless innings to earn his second win.

For Gaudineer, Matt Schmid and Ted Young all singled, while Charchuk and Mike Rodriguez belted doubles.

Kevin Dashi also doubled, and hit a triple to lead the attack.
