New Jersey's 21 countries will re quire a total of $874.4 million in proper v taxes to finance 1980 budgets. The inrease of $60.7 million, or 7.5 percent is the largest since imposition of the county cap on tax levies in 1977. The levy increases in the first-three years of the cap were 5.7 percent, 4.6 percent and 6.4 percent, respectively.

The permitted tax levy growth under the cap law is 5 percent. However, certain budget items are excluded from the calculation such as debt service, newly enacted state of federally mandated expenditures and certain emergency spending authorizations. In addition, revenue generated by the increase in property valuations of new construction or improvements raises the limit further. The allowable increase under the cap varied from a high of 13.4 percent for Atlantic County (in large part due to new construction) to a low of 4.1 percent for Essex County.

"Counties appear to be hard-pressed-in 1980 to comply with the cap limitation, observed NJTA. Statewide, countries raised tax levies within $1.3 $62.1 million. Six countries, Camden, Cumberland, Gloucester, Monmouth, Morris and Passaic, fully budget their authorized increase. Another five counties, Burlington, Hunterdon, Somerset. Sussex, and Union, were within $500 of

Increase cited in cost of milk

Minimum retail prices for whole white milk increased a half cent a quart June I, it was announced by Woodson W. Moffett Jr., director of the state Department of Agriculture's Division

Department of Agriculture's Division of Dairy Industry.

The lowest prices at which milk may be sold is 47½ cents per quart, 90 cents per half-gallon and $1.74 per gallon. The price change, the second in as many months, results from an increase in prices paid to dairy farmers, Moffett said, which reflects the continued impact of recently announced increases in federal milk price supports. "Because this price increase is caused by action on the federal level," Mofett said, "it will affect consumer prices throughout the nation. However, we exect New Jersey prices to continue to e lower than most others in the na-

By June, the roses were blooming the leaves and grass were a bright green and the roads, while badly rutted, were dry enough for a wagon to pass over without becoming mired in mud. General Washington, apparently fearing an invasion of New Jersey around July 15, issued a call for 17,000 men to augment the 3,500 men he had at Morristown.

It took nearly a year, but the campaign did succeed. It raised the $18,000 which the Historical-Society needed to buy the Caldwell Parsonage and the two lots on which it stands.
For Giacona, looking back on it as the bicentennial of the Battles of Springfield and Connecticut Farms approaches, it remains in the memory as "a very enjoyable experience."
And, Simpson added, "There's no question about it. We saved the house."

Revolutionary War when it was owned by the Dayton family.

In the early 19th century, the Cannonball House was known as the Hutchings homestead, according to the Springfield Public Library.

The 55-acre land, bought for $3,000 from the Ardene family, was sandwiched between Morris and Essex Turnpike and the Rahway River. The Ardenes lost money on the deal, because records in the Essex County Register's Office indicates they had bought it from the Steele family for $5,000 in 1806.

When Abraham Hutchings died in 1813, his wife Margaret and her three children lived on the farm under a dower law until 1827. A dower law allowed a portion of a deceased husband's estate to be used by his wife during her lifetime. The property then reverted to his heirs.

The land was subdivided in 1827 between Hutching's children, Mary, Abraham Jr. and George. George acquired a 9½ acre tract of land on which the Cannonball House stood, according to research by George Casselman of the Springfield Historical Society.

George Hutchings lived in the house until 1840, when the Bonnel family obtained the house for payment of a debt.

In 1841, Isarael A. Morehouse received the deed to the property, but sold it to Eugene Jobs in 1848 who held it during the Civil War, according to the Springfield Public Library. The County of Union was established during this time, and all other records of the land are in the Union County Courthouse.

The house was bought and sold once more and, in 1868, Alexander and Sarah Robertson subdivided the land to the size of the present lot and handed over the deed to Joseph and Jane Marsh.

The property changed hands twice more and, in 1896, Ida S. Heard obtained the house. William Heard, her son, inherited the property after her death in the early 1930s and sold it again after the end of World War II.

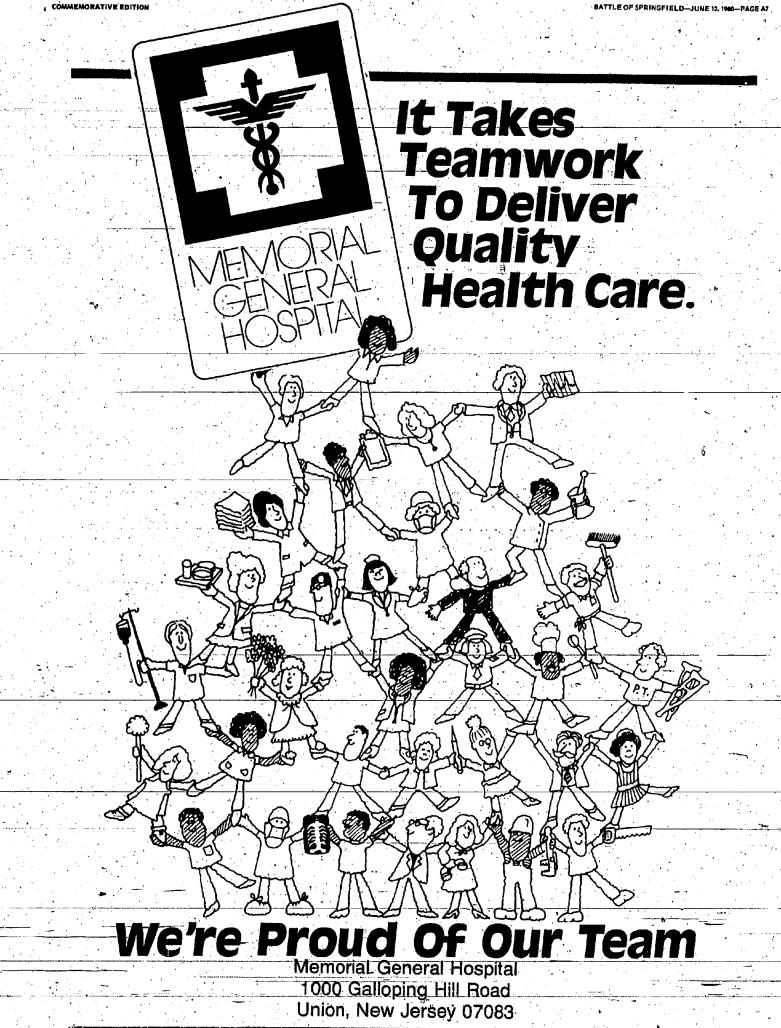

C.Harry Casperson bought the property in 1954 and, upon his death in 1955, the Springfield Historical Society bought it and made it their head-quarters.

This new battle will be a tough one because once energy is used, it cannot be replaced and is lost forever. To win this fight each of us must take an active part at home, on the road and

The Aluminum Association, of which we are a member, made a voluntary commitment in 1974 to the U.S. Department of Energy to reduce our overall use of energy 10 per cent by the end of 1980. We achieved this goal in 1978, and voluntarily agreed to attempt another 10 per cent reduction by 1985. It's not an easy goal, but with careful planning we believe it can be done.

Just as our forefathers volunteered to fight for what believed in 200 years ago, we must now volunteer to fig-battle on energy.

We formed our line and waited. Suddenly behind us high on the Short Hills behind the spring fields we heard "Old Sow" ' fire, calling the 13,000 milititamen in Essex, Morris and Mid-

We fought at the defile before the church for three hours. At one point we-charged across the defile and drove the British back to Jeremiah Smith's tavern.

The British troops kept arriving and when we recrossed the defile, the British gave us no time to dig in. Col. Dayton ordered us to fall back to a hill just before the old bridge over the Rahway River.

At the river we were joined by more militia. They had, an old iron four pounder field piece, which they used to such good purpose that the enemy was driven back some considerable distance. Being thus encouraged our regiment and the militia pressed upon and killed and wounded many of the Suddenly about 10 p.m., General Knyphausen ordered the British to break camp and retreat back to Elizabethtown Point.

His retreat was made in strict silence. Rain started to fall in torrents. The dirt roads turned into mud and riverlets. The British soldiers and their paid mercenaries had great difficulty pushing their wagons through the mud. Their handsome uniforms were soon mud spattered and water soaked and

Lightning flashed frequently revealing the dead on the ground, the skeletons of the burned buildings and the battle weary men as they stumbled and slid back to the Kill along the Vauxhall Road and Galloping Hill Road. Our lot was little better. Col. Dayton ordered us to harrass the British troops in their retreat. We tried, but our powder and our long rifles were soon wet and refused to fire. As we passed William Herd's house in Connecticut Farms, we learned that some of the British soldiers had helped themselves to a goodly supply of Herd's famous apple wiskey or "Jersey Lightning" before continuing their flight.

We continued to our old camp above

the river and fell into an exhasted sleep, legs weary and aching with hunger and Fresh militiamen, who knew the byways well, moved forward to reconnoiter the enemy's situation and strength through the night.

The British line extended from Elizabethtown Point to Crane's Ferry as most of the enemy was feried across the Arthur Kill in the flatboats. Meanwhile Brigadier General Edward Hand, commanding three regiments of fresh regulars, was ordered by General Washington to follow us toward Elizabethtown.

Arriving in Elizabethtown at 7 o'clock on Thursday morning, general Hand formed his men into three columns. He led the central column, composed of the regulars, down Water Street from the courthouse. Col. Philip Van Cortland was directed to take the left column of militiamen through the woods to New Point Road and approach the Crossroads from that direction, while the right column also composed of militiamen, was to travel along the Creek to Old Point Road to the attack. Absolute silence prevailed. Only the muffled sound of the man's feet could be heard as they splashed through pud-

General Hand reformed his column and pressed forward. Just before reaching the Crossroads, he halted to await word that the other two columns were in position before monting the at-tack. The time was endless.

Finally a messenger from Col. Van Cortland arrived. His militiamen were in position. No word was ever received from the column on Old Point Road. The British cannoncers, who had been standing ready with lighted torches, touched the fuses of the cannon. But the balls roared over the heads of the advancing men and crashed harmlessly into the road behind them plowing up the road. The British, after their long wait, had overshot. Before the British could adjust their aim, General Hand ordered the American regulars to withdraw to our position above the river. Col. Van Cortland took advantage of the battery's interest in Gen. Hand's regiments to attack with his long rifles. The British were forced to withdraw beyond the road to One Tree Island. The third column arrived at the Crossronds after they had been secured by our forces. It lay there until evening, when it too moved north of the town for the night.

Poor as our condition was, it was not as bad as the victims of the raid. We returned to Connecticut Farms to aid the women, children, the aged and the infirm, who had been burned out of their homes. Word reached our camp on the evening of Thursday, June 22, that a spy had told Gen. Greene, the British planned a

The British-troops halted on a rise east of the river to rest or to maneuver around us. We didn't know. We waited The British, as was their custom, pillaged all the houses in the village before setting the torch to most of them and the church. Only four hoses were left standing to shelter the British

Above us "Old Sow" began to sound the alarm and the smoke from signal fires rose heavenward alerting the militia. As it had on June 7, the militia assembled. This time, because of the murder of Mrs. Caldwell, their response was even faster than it had been the first time. Many were eager Their retreat was a shambles. Then we saw movement before us. Then we saw movement before us.

We fought bravely. The noise and the confusion were terrible. Smoke from the rifles obscured our targets. Our single cannon, fired at regular intervals, blasted our eardrums.

Meanwhile an Anspach regiment, supported by Jaegers, discovered that the swollen river was only waist deep about 300 yards downstream. They forded the river.

Printing uses craft, muscle

Printing has developed from the old days, when it involved "a combination of craft and muscle," to the present-day operation which requires "a knowledge of physics, chemistry and electronics." That assessment came from William Niler, president of the Millburn Press, which was founded by Short Hills businessman George E. Groscup in 1888. When Groscup "grew tired of dabbl-When. Groscup "grew tired of dabbling in real estate, coal and cord wood,"

he established the Short Hills Item, Niler said. He set type by hand by operated a hand-fed printing press.

Maplewood.

But by the end of the 1920s, the newspaper fell on hard times and changed hands at a sheriff's sale. Successive owners dropped the Maplewood edition, made changes in format and continued to do their own printing until

That year, the Item and nine otherarea newspapers took their printing to a high-speed press in Summit, leaving the Millburn equipment idle. As a result, the Millburn plant began job printing. By 1947, the commercial printing work was substantial enough to warrant a separate corporation, the Item Press. The company that was to become the Millburn Press parted ways with its newspaper parent when th owners sold the newspaper and joine forces with the job shop's manager to form the Millburn-Short Hills Press i Niler purchased the business i The firm "utilizes camera-ready art from the company's ad agency quality art department, which enters the camera room and before long, the

There were springs flowing into the headwaters of the Rahway River in 1717 when a family named Briant settled to farm the fields, bringing about, logically, the name Springfield.

Connecticut role Settlers from Connecticut in 1667 moved down to what is now Union to satisfy their needs for more land. That land is now known as Connecticut Farms.

'80 special for Connecticut Farms Church

The year 1980 has a double significance for Connecticut Farms Presbyterian Church in Union. It is the 200th anniversary of the Bat-tles of Springfield and Connecticut-Farms; it also is the 250th anniversary

County provided Livingston, Clark

Many Tory sympathizers from Union County fled to Canada and Nova Scotia after the British defeat. Despite the heavy Tory support, the county could boast of Revolutionary heroes like William Livingston, elected governor of New Jersey in 1776, and Abraham Clark of Elizabelhtown, one of signers of the Declaration of Independence. of Engagernown one of signers of the Declaration of Independence.
Col. Elias Dayton and his son Jonathan, major leaders in the Battle of Springfield, also made vital contributions to the American effort.

Benedict Arnold defected to the Benedict Arnold defected to the British in 1830, a few weeks after being convicted of fraternizing with the Tories in Philadelphia.

Gen. George Washington let Arnold off with a reprimand following the December 1779 court-martial proceedings at Dickerson Tavern in Morristown.

Merger big event

The Singer Manufacturing Co.'s merging of several plants into one large Elizabethport plant in 1873 has been the of the church.

The first settlers moved to the place now known as Union in 1667. They came from Connecticut, where most of them had been farmers; they found fertile land, with an abundance of water, ideal for farming. It seemed natural, then, to call their new home Connecticut

At first the settlers traveled to Elizabethtown to worship at the First Presbyterian Church there. But in 1730 they built their own house of worship-a frame building on a hill on the main

The new Connecticut Farms Presbyterian Church was led by six difeferent pastors in its first 49 years. The sixth, the Rev. Benjamin Hait (Hoyt), held the pulpit through most of the Revolutionary War years but died on June 27, 1779. To fill the vacancy, the Presbytery of Elizabeth named the Rev. James Caldwell, minister of the First Presbyterian Church, as interim pastor.

Known as the "Fighting Parson" for his vehement views, he had moved his wife and children from Elizabethtown to what is now the Caldwell Parsonage Museum-ironically, to get them away from the British. Mrs. Caldwell was in the parsonage when she was shot and killed by a stray bullet during the battle

Not only did Hannah Caldwell lose her life that year; the congregation also lost its church, which was burned when the invading British sacked Connecticut Farms. The villagers decided to rebuild at the same site. They started work on the new building in 1783 and finished in 1788, but it was many years before the the meantime, church-goers would arrive on Sunday mornings carrying ben-ches, boxes or chairs to sit on, since there were no pews.

A Sunday school was started in 1806 by Mary Potter in her father's corn

Difficult times were ahead. Church rolls declined, and records talk about "neglect of the house of God" and "intemperate use of alcohol." But the church did own land: it sold wood to chard picked and sold. The grass in the orchard was cut every year, and half was sold while the other half was given to the minister for his horse and cow. The historic significance of Connecticut Farms Presbyterian Church received official recognition 10 years ago. At that time; it became the first site in New Jersey to be listed on the National Register of Historic Places.
