By CRAIG CLIKINGER
 Thunders and rain failed to dampen the spirits of youngsters in the three water fights that took place at the playgrounds last night. In fact, the cooling, air-purifying rain was just what was needed and encouraged planning for future events in local playgrounds.

Sketches of literary greats, scholars on shelf

By ROSE P. SIMON
 The Springfield Public Library lists the following titles among recently received books.

LITERARY PORTRAITS
 "Great Friends," by David Garnett. There is a brief sketch of the author who, in turn, portrays 17 of his—and his parents'—friends. Now, at 88, David Garnett—son of Edward (a publisher's reader most of his life) and Constance (translator of many Russian works into English) appraises his friends. These memories were recorded after the publication of 18 novels, three autobiographies, and numerous short stories.

Garnett recalls his youthful connection with Joseph Conrad, his father's friend. He was a man of action, as well as an intellectual with the genius of imagination. The elder Garnett had little interest in the writings of John Galsworthy after he became famous. He "looked at life through the windows of his club." As a young man, David Garnett had a youthful connection with Joseph Conrad, his father's friend. He was a man of action, as well as an intellectual with the genius of im-

Three parties

Television advertisements this weekend for John Anderson for president raise an important question of the effect of a third-party candidate for this nation's highest office.

Although many of us have seen a three-way contest for the presidency—George C. Wallace comes to mind—we have not seen one who might have the strength Mr. Anderson could be capable of exhibiting.

He probably will take votes from the Democratic Party, despite his affiliation with the Republicans for his political life. This brings us to the question: What happens if no candidate garners a majority of the votes in the electoral college?

First, there is nothing in our Constitution that says we are a two-party country. As a matter of fact, our Constitution indicates just the opposite—we are a free country with the option of two, three or even more political parties from which to choose.

Should Mr. Anderson's vote-getting ability upset the long-standing tradition of a presidential race featuring just two candidates, we feel the system is capable of dealing with it. Although it could go into the House of Representatives, it also could, and probably should, be handled by the electoral college. It is our strong belief that backroom politics will not take over should his bid put the outcome into the electoral college.

A second reason some will try to discount an Anderson bid is that the two-party system, as many of us have known it for most of our voting lives, is a smooth running system. It is smooth, however, only because it helps feed itself. This does not mean it works for the best interests of our country or ourselves, but rather that it works to keep itself healthy.

Although we have a good understanding of the functions the two major political parties perform in our society, we feel this is a critical time in our history, and that every voter must cast his or her ballot for the candidate of his or her choice. That vote must be based on the facts as you see them, and not on a vague threat that our country will go down the tubes if there are three relatively strong candidates running for the highest office in our country.

This is not an endorsement of Mr. Anderson, but an endorsement of those who drafted our Constitution and of those in the electoral college today upon whose shoulders the burden rests.

Rinaldo

Possibly the single most frustrating problem that many families face in New Jersey is the care of elderly relatives.

While the majority of elderly below 75 years of age are able to function normally, the percentage with chronic and disabling ailments increases dramatically after that age. There are presently 23 million persons over the age of 65, and this population group is expected to increase to 32 million persons by the year 2000.

The health care system that already is unable to provide nursing and home health services for the elderly will break down in the late 1980s unless Congress changes the Medicare regulations to provide a substitute for institutional and nursing care for the aged. It is evident that most families cannot afford private nursing care, and the chronic shortage of beds for Medicaid patients which is medical welfare for the very poor—will be impossible to overcome.

Each year hundreds of families contact my office seeking assistance in placing their elderly patients in nursing homes that accept Medicaid patients, or in obtaining a bed at Runnels Hospital, the only public institution that provides nursing care in Union County.

Veterans hospitals in East Orange and at Lewis have waiting lists in the hundreds. There is, however, very little I can do since patients must be assigned to a first come, first served basis. It often means waiting years to be admitted to Runnels, or a VA hospital. Moreover, few private nursing homes have space for Medicaid patients due to the fact that nursing homes receive a substantially smaller reimbursement from the government than they do for private care patients.

What is the answer to this chronic shortage of nursing home care for the aged? Most families become bankrupt taking care of the elderly. Can families stand the emotional strain of keeping an elderly bedridden relative at home at a time when many husbands and wives are forced to work outside the home? Who will care for the elderly if they stay home, either alone or with relatives?

Ever since this problem emerged at hearings of our committee in Congress, the House Select Committee on Aging, I have supported the expansion of home health care services in place of institutional care for the aged. The present program under Medicare, however, is a hodge-podge of regulations that deny home health services to all-but-a-handful-of people. We need a new approach that drops unnecessary requirements which serve to encourage the elderly to be admitted to hospitals and undertake costly and sometimes unnecessary medical examinations.

The legislation I am co-sponsoring offers a broad range of home health services, including homemaker, aide, adult day care and respite services. The adult care centers would provide full-time supervision of the elderly during the work week, allowing families to take their parents home during the night and on weekends. In addition, respite centers would make it possible for families to leave an older member under supervised care for short periods of brief vacations.

Unnecessary examinations and treatment of the elderly in order to qualify them for Medicare payments also would be sharply reduced. Automatic routine examinations at entering hospitals would be eliminated under the legislation. One major study of Medicare found that more than half the patients' visits and screenings were unnecessary, but were primarily carried out in order to qualify the elderly patient for Medicare benefits.

The fact that Medicare provides only short term observation compels many elderly people to qualify for Medicaid by transferring their assets to a not-in-family member, and doing everything possible to plead poverty. It is a degrading experience for the elderly, who are proud that they have been self-sufficient all their lives.

One result of this increase in Medicaid eligibility is that the federal contribution has doubled to $1 billion annually, and many states are having difficulty raising funds from property taxes to cover their share of Medicaid. Often an increase in federal funds has led the states to cut back on their share of Medicaid.

By amending the Medicare program, Congress can provide a more practical, less confusing and cost effective approach that would reverse the trend of putting the elderly in institutions.

As the aging goes, there is no place like home. Providing health services in the homes of the elderly can humanize the process of growing old in America and relieve the financial and emotional anxieties of those families faced with extravagant nursing home bills.

Taffy, the 'one-down-ear dog,' returns to a new, loving home

By Bob Baxter
How we Americans poll our pet dogs and cats. We overfeed, overdress and even overlove them. Pet foods, probiotics and services cost the American public several billion dollars annually. This is not so in most foreign countries. A dog or cat is a working member of the family—the cat catches mice and rats, the dog guards the sheep or the family, or pulls a cart or hauls.

In the upper corner of Fairburg, where the Irvington lines is on the left of the house and the Maplewood line is in the backyard, two my mother had adopted. Their neighbor is a Spanish family, and they are very nice people. Jose brought this little dog home for his children a few years back. She is a cute little cur with tan fur and a pleasing face.

The children, like all kids, played rough with the little fox terrier, and one day, in play, broke the cartilage in the dog's left ear, making it droop down. Now Charlie, as the only was said, but he also was angry that the little dog had been banished to the wilds of Bayonne.

But she was gone. Three weeks went by, and then one day Jose heard the faint scratching and whimper at his back door. Taffy was home once more.

Now she was thin, with her ribs showing, and the pads on her paws were bleeding. So Taffy, she had crossed two rivers, crossed the entire city of Newark and traveled about 20 miles to return.

This did it for Charlie. He told Jose that since he obviously didn't want the dog, he, Charlie, would keep her. Jose really was happy the pup had found a home.

Now Taffy sports a new collar that has her license tag on it. She is well-fed, well-pampered and almost spoiled.

She lives in quiet luxury, sleeps in Charlie's bed, and often is fed steak.

As Charlie was quick to point out to his neighbor, Jose, the day he brought the license, Taffy now was an American. Taffy earned her rights the hard way. Why now she even is learning how to understand English, instead of Spanish. Pretty smart for a one-down-ear dog.

You and your money

Filing income tax return late could result in costly penalties

By JUDITH R. RHODES
Q. I just filed my income tax. Will I have to pay a penalty?—P.J., Jackson, Miss.

A. If you owed money to Uncle Sam, the penalty for late filing is five percent of the tax not paid in time. The penalty is figured for each month or part of a month your return is late, up to 25 percent of the tax paid late. If you have filed your return on time, but are not making the payment now, your penalty will be one-half of one percent of the tax not paid on time. This penalty is figured for each month or part of a month the payment is late, up to 25 percent of the tax paid late.

If you were late in both the filing and the payment, penalties apply for any month, although the combination of the two is limited to five percent of the unpaid tax for that month.

Naturally, if you do not owe any money, and filed late, you will not be taxed on a percentage of nothing owing.

From reading the newspapers, there seems to be so many consumer scams being run throughout the country, I felt that some comments on consumer protection would be in order.

The first way you can protect yourself is to avoid being cheated. Don't give in to sales pressure, don't sign a contract under pressure. When you are considering a major purchase, shop around. Consider price and quality. Don't rely on what a salesman tells you. It is usually better while to wait and consider carefully any contemplated purchase before making a decision. When you have a sales contract to sign, always read it before signing. If you are unable to understand the terms, have someone you trust read it and explain it to you. The emphasis is placed on reading the contract BEFORE you sign and not afterwards. Make certain the contract says exactly what you agreed to during the sale.

Everything that you were promised should be a part of that written contract. Do not be afraid to write on the contract—usually any promise the salesperson made to you which are not already written on the contract. If the seller refuses to let you put these promises in writing, that is a good indication you should shop elsewhere.

Don't sign a contract in which there are blank spaces. Put a line through any blank space before you sign. Don't sign any kind of paper which contains blank spaces. If you feel that you have been a party to a fraudulent sale, you should report it to your nearest law enforcement agency. Your report should include whenever possible, the full names and addresses of the seller and all people involved in the transaction. You should include the names and addresses of witnesses if there were any. Include all the details of the transaction, including the date and place of sale, and what oral representations were made to you.

Also include copies of all documents including the contract itself, receipts, cancelled checks or other written notices which were made. If you are not certain whom to contact, your local police department should be able to supply you with a telephone number.

Resorts' prize called near-worthless junk

Two firms promoting the consumers who time sharing of resort have responded to the Division of Consumer Affairs. The firms have sought "resort" which is advertised in New Jersey by mail to New Jersey residents. Prizes being offered to New Jersey consumers in solicitation for certain "time-sharing" plans are not worth the price of the postage sent to the consumer. The prizes are junk jewelry promoted as diamonds which is itself a quarter-carat, a small diamond necklace in a case, and a watch. The diamond is of a low-grade common industrial diamond that is worth, at best, less than $10.

The New Jersey Division of Consumer Affairs has received one of these solicitations for a time-sharing resort. The consumer must travel to the resort to receive the prize. When the consumer arrives to pick up his prize, he then gets a prolonged and intense sales pitch for the vacation time-sharing plan.

Time-sharing plans typically involve contracts by which consumers become obligated to pay a substantial sum of money to acquire the right to use a room at a resort for a specified week for example, the third week in September every year for a term of years. In some of these contracts consumers get locked into a vacation plan for 10 years or more.

Air quality booklet marks lung unit's anniversary

A booklet on air quality in New Jersey is a major accomplishment marking the 79th anniversary of the American Lung Association of New Jersey. The booklet, "Air Pollution in New Jersey—Problems, Programs and Prospects," is presented in four sections and provides information about all aspects of air pollution in the state, according to Hearn. The sections are: What's in the air? What are we doing about it? Costs and benefits of cleaning up, and Where do we go from here?

Hearn also cited "other" accomplishments of the society in the past year as listed in the organization's annual report, including awarding of grants totaling $10,000 to support pulmonary disease training in the state.
