Budget adoption postponed

By Tom Canavan
Editor

The Township Committee postponed the adoption of its 1993 municipal budget Tuesday because of amendments that must be made to the spending plan.

According to Township Treasurer Mate Sodak, those amendments come in the form of Supplemental Safe Neighborhoods funding, which the state has told the township to use this year.

The Committee is expected to adjust the budget, with no impact on the taxpayer from the budget that was introduced earlier this month, by using funds in the surplus account. The figure is in the $25,000 to $30,000 range.

The budget, $14,148,029, represents an increase of less than 5 percent over last year. The amount to be raised in taxes is approximately $7.5 million, an increase of $1.3 million, or about 20 percent over last year.

The owner of a home in Springfield assessed at $175,000 can expect to pay about $1,250 to support the budget.

Mayor Philip Kurmos called the committee could not have adopted the budget as scheduled. "Hopefully, we can have a special meeting so that at the next regular meeting, we will be able to adopt our budget," he said.

The Township Committee opened the public hearing on the budget for residents to comment, but no one came forward to address the spending plan. When the committee reaches the adoption of the budget, there will be no further opportunity for the public to be heard.

In other business during the Township Committee, the governing body rescinded the late fee it imposed this year on pool membership for those residents who failed to meet the May 15 deadline to submit their applications.

Committeewoman Joanne Holmes explained that the committee decided to implement a late charge for pool fees for applications received after May 15, but because of problems that arose with a townshipwide bulk mailing, the committee felt it was in the best interest of all residents to rescind the move.

"It was due to a lack of preparation," Holmes said. Those residents who responded after the deadline will have the additional charge refunded.

Insurance coverage resolved

By Tom Canavan

An administrative change at Springfield's insurance carrier resulted in a number of complaints from township employees who were wondering why some of their medical claims were being rejected, but the Township Committee resolved the matter on Tuesday night.

Unbeknownst to the Township Committee, Signa, the township's insurance carrier, was the plaintiff in the beginning of its new contract with Springfield, and those amendments resulted in a change in the way benefits were paid.

A representative from Signa addressed the governing body Tuesday during the committee's executive session and explained that the basic plan that was being offered to employees now includes a provision called "Full Range Reasonable and Customary," which apparently made a difference in the company's payment for medical care.

The change, which was made in March, was implemented without notification to the Township Committee, and its members felt the decision was arbitrary and the township should not be held liable for it.

Signa's representative offered to hold the township harmless from the change and implement the administrative change beginning in March 1994, when the contract is again scheduled for renewal.

"We have been hearing charges from employees that their claims are being rejected and that services are not being provided," Mayor Philip Kurmos told the representative. He added that employees have been assuming the township was responsible for those charges and wanted to dispel that rumor.

Under Full Range Reasonable and Customary, Signa can review medical claims differently than it had in past contracts. The committee agreed to Signa's offer to wait until March to implement the change.

"I was extremely upset to hear from the insurance carrier that an administrative change did drastically affect the health and welfare of our employees without notification," said Committeeman Harry Pappas during the regular meeting. "Due to a lack of information stipulated to the Township Committee, we were able to resolve it and it won't happen again."

Kurmos said he was pleased with Signa's response to their inquiry. "This company has integrity," he said.

Kenilworth wants more cuts from regional budget

By Dennis Schaal
Staff Writer

In a move that stunned several regional school and municipal officials, the Borough of Kenilworth has reversed its public position and now seeks to win $3.1 million from the Union County Regional High School District's defeated budget.

The Kenilworth Borough Council was slated Tuesday night to consider a resolution calling for the $3.1 million cut in the 1993-94 budget based on three high schools.

"Kenilworth Mayor Joseph Rego said this week that his borough concurs with the $1.4 million in cuts already agreed to by the five other towns in the district. In addition, he said, the borough wants to also $900,000 from operations and maintenance, $800,000 from business and support services including teachers' pensions and insurance costs and $33,000 from equipment.

Rego's position — and he says he has the full backing of the Borough Council — contrasts sharply with the borough position at an April 28 meeting with the mayors and regional board officials and a May 7 meeting with the full regional board and the council from the six municipalities.

During those meetings, Rego said that Kenilworth would settle for nothing less than keeping open David Bressley Regional High School, scheduled to be closed in June and the subject of administrative law proceedings. Kenilworth did not press the municipalities or regional board to cut anything from the budget — no figure was aired.

Regional district Business Administrator Harold Burdge and Mountaintop Mayor Robert Vigilanti, who chaired the April 28 meeting among the six mayors, said one and all interpreted Kenilworth's position as being a no-cut stance.

"We're totally confused," Burdge said this week. "On April 28 Kenilworth wouldn't talk about any cuts. They took the same position on May 7."

"Kenilworth never told us in that meeting," Vigilanti said, referring to April 28. Rego said he had no numbers, that no number would satisfy him and that nothing would satisfy him other than keeping the school.

The five towns other than Kenilworth — Berkeley Heights, Clark, Glenwood, Mountaintop and Springfield — adopted resolutions, sent to the county education commissioner — endorsing $1.4 million in cuts from the regional tax levy, defeated April 20.

Kenilworth has sent a letter to the commissioner calling for $3.1 million in cuts and was ready to consider a formal resolution Tuesday night. Kenilworth and the regional board participated in a mediation session May 17 with the county superintendent, but there was no meeting of the minds.

County Superintendent Leonard First is expected to make a recommendation to the state education commissioner on the size of the cuts shortly. Rego said this week that from the

The Kenilworth mayor said his $3 million should be trimmed from the spending plan.

He maintained that "of course" the other municipalities and the regional board misinterpreted Kenilworth's position that it sought no cuts. Rego claimed he said to Vigilanti — a statement Vigilanti doesn't recall — that if Kenilworth started citing specific numbers then proposed cuts might be in the $3 million range.

Rego says Kenilworth changed its publicly expressed position because the borough was advised that it could not state merely to keep Bressley open — but that it would have to present a figure.

Prayer ban to be followed

By Jeff Jett
Staff Writer

Following a 1992 Supreme Court ruling barring prayer from public school graduation ceremonies, officials from the Union County Regional Board of Education, which includes David Bressley High School, confirmed that the district will follow the law and provide a secular alternative.

According to Regional Superintendent of Schools Donald Merschlik, the district will enter its second year of holding graduation ceremonies without a religious invocation.

"The schools normally had clergy," he said, "and they rotated members of different faiths each year."

Merschlik said the schools now offer a non-denominational talk given by faculty members selected by the principal. He said the move was first used at Governor Livingston Regional High School in Berkeley Heights in 1991 and the other three regional schools — Bressley, Arthur L. Johnson in Clark and Jonathan Dayton in Springfield — all made the change last year.

The change follows the 1992 decision by the Supreme Court in Lee vs. Weisman to ban prayer at graduation ceremonies. The ruling followed the claims of a Rhode Island man, Daniel Weisman, who sued over an invocation and benediction at Nathan Bishop Junior High School in Providence, where his daughter was a member of the graduating class.

Chase from Springfield nets Newark teen-ager

By Chris Gatto Staff Writer

A 19-year-old Newark man was apprehended by Union and Hillside police following a high-speed car chase and subsequent crash on Route 22 on May 18, an official said.

Officers arrested Corey Bland, alias Michael Marshall, of 94 16th Ave. that afternoon after the teen-ager attempted to elude police by fleeing from a stolen Mitsubishi which had flipped over while traveling on Route 22 East in Union, according to Union Deputy Police Chief Dennis Farrell.

A pair of other suspects escaped in a white Acura Integra reportedly stolen from the Holiday Inn on Route 22 in Springfield the night before, Farrell said. The Acura had been traveling with the Mitsubishi during a high-speed chase with police, Farrell noted.

Bland is being charged with possession of a motor vehicle and eluding police via a motor vehicle, police said, and faces additional charges as the result of an alleged theft attempt which occurred May 18 in Union.

Those charges include burglary in a motor vehicle and criminal damage. He also faces charges from Springfield, where Bland was allegedly involved in a motor vehicle theft.

Detective Stan Mazur of the Union Police Division is investigating the incident, and Farrell indicated more arrests are anticipated.

According to Farrell, Bland and the occupants of the other vehicle matched the description of three suspects who had attempted to steal a 1992 BMW from Union, the suspect then reportedly fled to Springfield, where they committed an apparent carjacking of the Mitsubishi in the parking lot of Park City, he added.

The suspects reportedly fled the scene on Route 22 East, one occupying the Mitsubishi and the other two in the Acura, which had previously been in their possession, police said.

Springfield issued a report of the incident and Union police Sgt. Thomas Villano and Sgt. Richard Karpiński observed the vehicles passing and began to follow them.

Police Officers Joseph Slickinger and Kenneth Fulton also joined the pursuit, as did Detective Edward Gutsch, Farrell said. The suspects' vehicles were traveling at a high rate of speed while being pursued, Farrell noted, when the driver of the Mitsubishi attempted to pass a garbage truck, and the car flipped over onto its roof.

Although the vehicle was flattened, the sole occupant, Bland, was able to pull himself out from the wreck, and ran toward a grassy section near the railroad tracks off Route 22 by Bristol Meyers, noted Farrell. Hillside Police Officer Wayne Hess and Fulton chased the suspect and were able to make the apprehension.

Fulton had been injured when a suspect's vehicle crashed into an unattended car he and his partner, Union Police Officer Robert Miller, were traveling in during their tenure with the Union-Essex Auto Theft Task Force in late 1991. Fulton returned to street patrol about two weeks ago, Farrell said.

Bland was taken to Hillside police headquarters before being turned over to Union, noted Farrell. The suspect was expected to be sent to Springfield, where he faces charges which resulted from the carjacking.

The attempted theft in Union occurred at 1:15 p.m. in the parking lot of the Shift Steak House on Route 22, where suspects had broken into a 1992 green BMW. Farrell said the vehicle's rear window had been smashed, but suspects were scared off when someone walked out of the restaurant and observed what they were doing.

A witness later told police that two black males, one Hispanic had been observed leaving the scene in a white Acura Integra after the attempted break-in. Police responded to the scene, but the suspects' vehicle had already fled onto Route 22 East where it subsequently made a U-turn and sped away toward Springfield.

Fulton had been injured when a suspect's vehicle crashed into an unattended car he and his partner, Union Police Officer Robert Miller, were traveling in during their tenure with the Union-Essex Auto Theft Task Force in late 1991. Fulton returned to street patrol about two weeks ago, Farrell said.

Bland was taken to Hillside police headquarters before being turned over to Union, noted Farrell. The suspect was expected to be sent to Springfield, where he faces charges which resulted from the carjacking.

The attempted theft in Union occurred at 1:15 p.m. in the parking lot of the Shift Steak House on Route 22, where suspects had broken into a 1992 green BMW. Farrell said the vehicle's rear window had been smashed, but suspects were scared off when someone walked out of the restaurant and observed what they were doing.

A witness later told police that two black males, one Hispanic had been observed leaving the scene in a white Acura Integra after the attempted break-in. Police responded to the scene, but the suspects' vehicle had already fled onto Route 22 East where it subsequently made a U-turn and sped away toward Springfield.

Grossman selected for Lions efforts

Stanley Grossman of Springfield recently returned from a day-long orientation meeting in Mountaintop, where he officially assumed his role as a "group coordinator" for Campaign SightFirst, Lions Club International's $200 million worldwide fund-raising effort to combat blindness.

Stanley Grossman

Lions have long been active in the cause of sight preservation and aid to the blind, and in 1990, the world's largest voluntary service organization dedicated itself to the elimination of unnecessary blindness throughout the world. The World Health Organization estimates that there are at least 40 million blind people in the world today and warns that the number could double within the next 25 years. WHO also estimates that as many as 80 percent of those who go blind lose their sight to preventable or reversible causes, especially cataract, vitamin A deficiency, river blindness, trachoma, glaucoma and complications of diabetes. In preparation for an intensive year of fund raising in the coming Lions fiscal year — July 1 to June 30, 1994 — clubs are challenged to raise a minimum of $1,000 in 1992-93. "It's amazing what can be accomplished with as little as $1,500," Grossman said. "For example, $1,500 can restore sight to as many as 200 people in parts of the developing world through low cost cataract operations, or prevent as many as 3,750 children from becoming blind because of Vitamin A deficiency," he said. According to Grossman, a past district governor in the international organization, is one of 6,600 group coordinators from around the world. As a group coordinator, he will work closely with six to eight local Lions clubs to implement fund-raising plans in a portion of Union County. At the Mountaintop meeting, Grossman was joined by 12 other group coordinators from District 102 — Essex, Union, Morris and Warren counties. "I look upon this challenge as the opportunity of a lifetime," Grossman said, referring to his appoint-

State's unemployment rate may sink Florio

It is difficult to write a column about the New Jersey political scene when you have just returned from a relaxing vacation in Puerto Rico. As I looked through the stack of newspapers that had built up over the past week, I saw much of the same stuff that was dominating the headlines when I left: senatorial courtesy, bond scandals, sports betting, the possible state takeover of the Newark schools and Christine Whitman on the verge of winning the GOP primary.

Since I had written on many of these topics in the past few weeks, I searched for an issue worthy of this column's loyal and astute readership. Then I came across a headline from earlier this month that read "New Jersey's unemployment rate jumps to 11.1 percent." How could I have missed the story when the U.S. Labor Department announced that the state's unemployment rate had reached its highest point in nine years? The statistics were shocking: 358,000 unemployed residents last month, 33.0 percent unemployed, and 40,000 more than in April 1992. The state's unemployment rate was the highest among the nation's 11 most industrialized states. Even more alarming was the fact that the sharp increase in the New Jersey unemployment rate was in stark contrast to the nation's overall unemployment rate, which remained at 7 percent. As for our neighbors, New York's jobless rate dropped 0.3 percent to 7 percent, while Pennsylvania also dropped 0.3 percent to 6.6 percent.

Screening New Jersey

By Steve Adubato Jr.

"The numbers are telling us more of the same," said Sam Ehrlich, regional commissioner for the Labor Department. "Two years after the national recession began, New Jersey has not turned the corner." Tim Ehrenthal, delivered this depressing assessment: "With no turn around in sight, I think we're seeing that New Jersey is having great difficulty pulling out of its quagmire of economic troubles."

Forget about politicians hiring illegal aliens or not voting in school board elections. That stuff pales in comparison to the fact that so many Garden State residents who want to work are being denied that opportunity. For those of us who are gainfully employed, it may be hard to relate to 33,000 people losing their jobs in the month of April alone. But in the age of "downsizing" and economic uncertainty, the fact is any one of us could be the next to join the unemployment line. It's scary.

Beyond the human, social and obvious economic impact of these late horrendous unemployment figures, politically, this is a potential dynamite, especially for Jim Florio. "This is sinking Florio. I can't imagine how he can survive a 9.1 percent unemployment rate when his approval rating is in the 30s," said Steve Malanga, managing editor of Crain's New York Business and a lifelong resident of New Jersey. According to Malanga, what is particularly troubling for the governor are the constant references to New Jersey having "the worst, the worst" unemployment rate of all the industrialized states. "It's the nail in his coffin," he said.

I pressed Malanga on his political logic since I have argued many times that it is unfair to call this a "Florio recession," as many Republicans have tried to do. After about 20 minutes, an exasperated Malanga, who regularly speaks with business people and consumers, said, "Look, we see it again and again. We saw it with Bush last year and Jimmy Carter before him when unemployment rates were 13, 14 percent. We saw it with Reagan in '84 when people may not have thought he was all that sharp, but when unemployment was down. The unemployment rate is the one economic issue that the average voter can understand." He argues that whoever's watch is ticking when people are losing their jobs is the one who pays the biggest price politically. "It's not real complicated, it makes a lot of sense."

Malanga makes the compelling argument that in the face of such depressing unemployment figures, it's going to be extremely difficult for Florio to continue saying he made the "tough decisions" — the $2.8 billion tax package — that have put New Jersey in a position to "rebound faster than the surrounding states." Exactly how is Florio going to explain why our state is worse off than all the other industrialized states, many of which didn't raise taxes?

So while most pundits and insiders ponder the political ramifications and fallout of complicated stories about bond deals, health care "reform" and school funding formulas, it may well be that this governor's race comes down to one simple, but graphic statistic: the state's unemployment rate. If it stays where it is, a full two points higher than the nation as a whole and higher than all the other states that look like us, Jim Florio is probably dead politically. No detailed explanations of having to raise taxes to balance the budget and fund schools, no matter how legitimate, or clever campaign rhetoric about making "tough decisions," is going to cut it.

If such an astronomical number of New Jerseyans remain out of work, or if things get worse, the former boxer and current governor will find himself on the ropes with little ammunition to fight back with. What's Florio going to say? "At least, we've better off than Mississippi!"

The attack was but a feint. The French by-passed the city into New Jersey and joined Washington in a forced march to tap Cornwallis at Yorktown. A French fleet of ships and an instructor of public administration and mass media at Rutgers University.

As the summer of 1981 neared, re-entrenchment groups decided that the Battle of Yorktown must be replayed as one of the biggest events of the Bicentennial Celebration. The march from Rhode Island to Yorktown would be marked with members of the Brigade of the American Revolution and others taking part, including even some French people who came to this country for the occasion. The plan was to follow as closely as possible the original route, which meant that the marchers would pass through Union County.

Betty Pat, of the Cultural and Heritage Office, felt that the county should become involved in this march, and thus "Operation Breadbasket" was planned and carried out. West was sent out to all of the historical societies and other organizations that food for the troops would be needed on Oct. 12. While there was no intention of trying to rebuild the Summit take over of Washington's race, everyone was asked to bring bread or rolls or similar items for the marchers. Individually wrapped in foil or plastic, they were to be taken to various pickup places throughout the county and then delivered to the three overnight encampments in the area.

The response was tremendous. Home-made bread of all types was baked by what seemed to be the entire population of the county. Girl Scouts, Boy Scouts, parents and youth organizations, historical societies, senior citizens, churches, service clubs and individuals provided a mountain of food. Early on the morning of Oct. 12, 1981, the first pickup was made in front of the Union County Courthouse. Symbolic of the Revolutionary period, the bread was placed in a horse-drawn cart, to be followed by Betty Pat, the organizer of the event, in a van. With a police escort the small parade moved as closely as possible over the Old York Road of Colonial times, a traditional route through the area of that time. Pickups were made at designated places along the way, and it was soon evident that the van was full and other cars would have to be pressed into service. The slow-moving parade began to lengthen with cars and their assistants. It wound its way through Elizabeth, Roselle Park, Roselle and into Linden. A highlight of the trip was when the police escort stopped all traffic at the intersection of Raritan Road, Stiles Street and Centennial Avenue in order for the horse to proceed at his own pace through the dangerous junction.

At the Miller-Cory House in Westfield there was already a mountain of food. The middle of the trip was when the vehicles used to collect the donations from the pickup points which the horse-drawn cart would have time to visit. As the parade moved on, the van was loaded with the food and sent to Liberty County to meet the troops who were scheduled to parade through the middle of the trip. The horse also was transported there to be in the parade. As the troops marched along the street, their uniforms gleamed and sparkled in the sunshine of the brilliant, blue-sky October day. The French wore white uniforms and the soldiers of Rochambeau, with swords and muskets. The Americans wore the uniforms of the various units which engaged the British in the Battle of the Clouds. Some wore of the Continental Army, and others wore the blue and buff of the New Jersey troops. There were the brown cloth of the backwoods militia, and the homespun of the Minutemen. The horse, well rested from his earlier task, was applauded as he pulled the two-wheeled cart along the road. Some artillerymen may have wished and raise their families in the New Jersey-New York Highlands.

It takes several hundred acres of forest without roads or houses to provide the food and habitat to make these long-distance travelers happy. And even then, it is best if these patches are located together, so that following songbird corridors can have a place to move into. Their problem is that forests required by these birds are getting smaller and smaller. Only decades ago, forest ownership patterns in the Highlands were such that the average parcel of land was over 25 acres, with numerous large areas available. Now the average parcel size is only half that. The chances of getting agreements with landowners to manage contiguous areas of forest for wildlife are really slim. It is hard to get human neighbors to agree on anything, especially

Residents provided bread for militia march

The Way It Was

By William Frolich

It was back in the spring of 1781 that General George Washington was feeling rather disappointed in the way in which the Revolutionary War was going. Perhaps "not going" would be a better way of saying it, for there was little activity in the northern regions and in the south the British army seemed to be in command of the area, although Generals Lafayette and Nathaniel Greene were there harassing British General Cornwallis. General Clinton was secure in New York City, and Washington lacked the means to attack him, for he had no ships.

By summer, however, there was a definite change in the situation. A French army under the command of Rochambeau had landed in Rhode Island to join General Washington, and word came from Greene that the American forces had maneuvered Cornwallis onto a narrow peninsula near Yorktown in Virginia where ships of the British Navy were expected to support him.

Washington and Rochambeau conceived a plan of action. Word was allowed to leak to Clinton in New York that the combined French and American armies were about to besiege the city, and to strengthen the city and to strengthen the group of bakers, large enough to supply bread to a besieging army, to be built in Sumner. When the French army moved toward White Plains, N.Y., Clinton was sure of the coming attack and prepared for defense.

The attack was but a feint. The French by-passed the city into New Jersey and joined Washington in a forced march to tap Cornwallis at Yorktown. A French fleet of ships and an instructor of public administration and mass media at Rutgers University.

As the summer of 1981 neared, re-entrenchment groups decided that the Battle of Yorktown must be replayed as one of the biggest events of the Bicentennial Celebration. The march from Rhode Island to Yorktown would be marked with members of the Brigade of the American Revolution and others taking part, including even some French people who came to this country for the occasion. The plan was to follow as closely as possible the original route, which meant that the marchers would pass through Union County.

Betty Pat, of the Cultural and Heritage Office, felt that the county should become involved in this march, and thus "Operation Breadbasket" was planned and carried out. West was sent out to all of the historical societies and other organizations that food for the troops would be needed on Oct. 12. While there was no intention of trying to rebuild the Summit take over of Washington's race, everyone was asked to bring bread or rolls or similar items for the marchers. Individually wrapped in foil or plastic, they were to be taken to various pickup places throughout the county and then delivered to the three overnight encampments in the area.

The response was tremendous. Home-made bread of all types was baked by what seemed to be the entire population of the county. Girl Scouts, Boy Scouts, parents and youth organizations, historical societies, senior citizens, churches, service clubs and individuals provided a mountain of food. Early on the morning of Oct. 12, 1981, the first pickup was made in front of the Union County Courthouse. Symbolic of the Revolutionary period, the bread was placed in a horse-drawn cart, to be followed by Betty Pat, the organizer of the event, in a van. With a police escort the small parade moved as closely as possible over the Old York Road of Colonial times, a traditional route through the area of that time. Pickups were made at designated places along the way, and it was soon evident that the van was full and other cars would have to be pressed into service. The slow-moving parade began to lengthen with cars and their assistants. It wound its way through Elizabeth, Roselle Park, Roselle and into Linden. A highlight of the trip was when the police escort stopped all traffic at the intersection of Raritan Road, Stiles Street and Centennial Avenue in order for the horse to proceed at his own pace through the dangerous junction.

At the Miller-Cory House in Westfield there was already a mountain of food. The middle of the trip was when the vehicles used to collect the donations from the pickup points which the horse-drawn cart would have time to visit. As the parade moved on, the van was loaded with the food and sent to Liberty County to meet the troops who were scheduled to parade through the middle of the trip. The horse also was transported there to be in the parade. As the troops marched along the street, their uniforms gleamed and sparkled in the sunshine of the brilliant, blue-sky October day. The French wore white uniforms and the soldiers of Rochambeau, with swords and muskets. The Americans wore the uniforms of the various units which engaged the British in the Battle of the Clouds. Some wore of the Continental Army, and others wore the blue and buff of the New Jersey troops. There were the brown cloth of the backwoods militia, and the homespun of the Minutemen. The horse, well rested from his earlier task, was applauded as he pulled the two-wheeled cart along the road. Some artillerymen may have wished

It takes several hundred acres of forest without roads or houses to provide the food and habitat to make these long-distance travelers happy. And even then, it is best if these patches are located together, so that following songbird corridors can have a place to move into. Their problem is that forests required by these birds are getting smaller and smaller. Only decades ago, forest ownership patterns in the Highlands were such that the average parcel of land was over 25 acres, with numerous large areas available. Now the average parcel size is only half that. The chances of getting agreements with landowners to manage contiguous areas of forest for wildlife are really slim. Destruction of forests endangering songbirds

State We're In

By David F. Moore

Have you ever thought about how much habitat space it takes to maintain a healthy population of a particular animal or plant species? I was recently by news about an endangered species, a woodpecker in the pine woodlands of the southern United States. It's another chapter relating to Central and South American rainforests, and even what is happening in the New Jersey-New York Highlands.

The red-cockaded woodpecker once occupied all of the southern states, but is now restricted to about a half dozen areas. Unlike many other bird species, this one doesn't migrate, but clusters in family groups, nesting in holes they've drilled in tall southern pines, the trees most likely to fall to the logger.

Such luck is unavailable to the 75 songbird species which spend their winters in Central and South America. The story in the news was about an agreement between the Georgia-Pacific Corporation and the U.S. Department of the Interior to provide forest habitat management practices so that both the company and the woodpecker can survive.

That's a most welcome agreement, given all the heat the poor spotted owl has suffered in the West. But as it happens, long-term woodpecker survival is unlikely, even with the best of intentions.

by the state, and it would serve as a resource or lawmakers who must be educated on the need for legislative action to help prevent both children and adults from sustaining injuries in the first place.

New Jersey's Biko Helms' Law, which was enacted in 1991, is an example of reasonable, effective policy that goes far in reducing the number of permanent head injuries suffered by children under 14 years of age. The Journal of the American Medical Association reports that bicycle helmets reduce the risk of head injury by 85 percent, significant in that approximately 50,000 children sustain bicycle-related head injuries every year in the United States.

The establishment of this legislative commission would be the state's first step in a more aggressive pursuit of enhanced supports for people with head injuries. The bill, SCR-81, unanimously passed the Senate last March and is pending in the Assembly.

Sen. C. Louis Bassano represents the 21st Legislative District.

It's your right

Under New Jersey's Open Public Records Act, you have a right to inspect most documents of local, county, and state governments and their subdivisions.

The law says that except in certain circumstances any record that is required to be kept by government is a public record.

You have a right to copies of public records within a reasonable amount of time and for a reasonable fee. There are exceptions, of course, for example, to protect personal privacy and the integrity of a criminal investigation.

To illustrate, you have a right to see the resume of the superintendent of schools, but you do not have a right to the superintendent's medical records.

The purpose of the Open Public Records Act is to ensure that public business is conducted in public.

Health Players help educate about depression

The Mental Health Players of Union County have joined with the Mental Health Association in New Jersey as part of a national public education campaign to increase awareness that clinical depression is a treatable medical illness. Throughout the year, each performance of the Mental Health Players will focus on a segment on the impact of depression.

Through improvisations, audiences learn to view important mental health and social issues such as divorce, suicide, death, deinstitutionalization, housing for the disabled, child and sexual abuse through more understanding and compassionate eyes. As part of the National Clinical Depression Awareness Campaign, Mental Health Players will explore the impact of depression on families, the elderly, children and in the workplace. Audiences will be able to better recognize the warning signs of depression in their own lives. A free brochure on depression will be available at each performance.

Clinical depression will strike 25 percent of women and 10 percent of men during their lifetime, said Carolyn Brachman, executive director of the Mental Health Association in New Jersey.

That means that more than 1.3 million of our friends and neighbors in New Jersey are at risk for this serious medical illness. It is important that the public know there are effective treatments for this illness," she said.

More than the "blues," clinical depression is a medical illness that affects a person's mood, feelings, sleeping and eating patterns. If a person has several of these symptoms for two weeks or longer, he or she should see a doctor. "In addition to medical treatment, joining a support group and educating oneself about clinical depression are important steps to recovery."

The Mental Health Players and Mental Health Association are working with more than 25 statewide sponsoring organizations in this nine-month educational campaign. The campaign features television, radio and print advertisements that will be coordinated with community education events, lectures and Depression Screening Day on Oct. 7.

Speech and language is focus during May

Although communication skills are essential for children to succeed in school, many children with treatable hearing, speech and language disorders are never properly diagnosed. The speech and language pathologists at Rahway Hospital advise parents to take time this May, Better Speech and Hearing Month, to assess their children's speech and language abilities.

The American Speech-Language-Hearing Association estimates that one in 10 families are affected by a communication disorder, that is, a problem with hearing, speaking or understanding language. Often, children whose speech and language disorders are not properly identified and treated are labeled "learning disabled" or "hearing disabled," according to Judith Diem, coordinator of speech and language pathology at Rahway Hospital.

Diem suggested that children who lag behind this schedule or do not communicate at an age-appropriate level should be evaluated by a qualified professional.

To learn more about the services available in Rahway Hospital's Speech and Language Pathology Department, call the hospital at 381-4200, Ext. 2115.

Union County physicians name '93 man of the year

Dr. Homer Nelson has been honored as the recipient of the 1993 Union County New Jersey Physician in Home Care of the Year Award. It was presented by the Center for Home Health Development, a non-profit organization dedicated to providing education, research and training for home health care providers.

Nelson, of Hillside, is medical director of Visiting Nurse and Health Services Hospice in Elizabeth. He is a graduate of the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey and completed his residency in internal medicine at St. Joseph's Hospital Medical Center in Paterson. He is an attending physician on the staffs of Elizabeth General Hospital and St. Elizabeth's Hospital. He is married and the father of three children.

The award honors physicians who facilitate independent living for the elderly and the disabled, care for AIDS patients, support chronically ill children and their families and provide comfort care for the terminally ill through the use of home health care services.

In close cooperation with the Home Health Assembly of New Jersey, selections are made by county selection committees, according to established criteria: empathy, ability to work with patients and their families, respect for patient autonomy, volunteer efforts to enhance and access community-based services and advocacy of home care as a positive alternative in the delivery of medical, nursing, therapy and support services.

The Home Health Assembly represents home care providers throughout the state and their network of more than 1,200 professional nurses, 16,000 home health aides, homemakers and other healthcare and support staff.

The award pays tribute to the extraordinary efforts by Nelson in treating not only his patients and the staff in Visiting Nurse and Health Services Hospice, but their families in a supportive and comforting environment.

Franks sponsors jobs fair in June

Saying "there is no more important issue facing the 7th Congressional District than putting people back to work," Congressman Bob Franks announced this week that he will be sponsoring a job fair on June 18 at Union County College in Cranford from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Joining Franks at a press conference at Union County College to announce the job fair were representatives of a number of chambers of commerce and businesses that are participating in the event. Franks said, "Everywhere I travel in the district I meet people who are out of work. At the same time, I meet owners of businesses who, despite the tough economic times, still are looking for talented, dedicated workers. I decided to sponsor the job fair to connect people in need of jobs with employers in search of workers."

The jobs fair is open to all residents of the 7th Congressional District, which covers parts of Union, Somerset, Middlesex and Essex counties.

Franks said, "Although the job fair is still a month away, I have been greatly encouraged by the positive response from the business community to this event. So far, more than 50 businesses with job openings have agreed to participate."

The congressman said that in addition to posting job openings, the job fair will offer a number of instructional seminars to assist people in their search for new employment. The seminars will include resume writing; job interviewing skills; and career opportunities in health care, sales and finance.

Franks said, "The job fair would not be possible without the generous assistance of the area's chambers of commerce and leading businesses who have donated their time to help organize the event and recruit employers with job openings."

The congressman said, "I would be pleased to expect that everyone who stops by the job fair will find a job. We do believe, however, that we can provide the unemployed with a new sense of hope and optimism."

Wouldn't You Like Some More of These Guys Hanging Around

Then You Should Advertise With Us!

Nothing makes the cash register ring like a newspaper ad. Studies prove it. For instance, newspaper more than doubles the sale of package goods. (Not increases, doubles it.) And we're not talking about fire sales and cents-off items. No, we're talking package goods at full-blown, retail prices. Now that's what you call a powerful advertising medium. And coincidentally, that's exactly what consumers call it, too.

In survey after survey, they cite newspaper as the medium of choice for shopping advice. The place they turn when they want to buy. The place they're actually looking for ads, not trying to avoid them. (Ha, bet you never heard anyone say that about tv.) The point is pretty clear. You should be advertising in newspaper. Unless, of course, you've got some strange aversion to sales.

Multifaceted artist, Phoebe Lane, to unveil talent in gallery exhibit

By Lea Smith
Lifestyle Editor

Phoebe Lane of Union, a multifaceted artist and sculptor whose curiosity about practically everything seems limitless, will offer a "multi media" presentation of paintings and sculptures at the Les Majumet Art Gallery in Union Public Library, Fibiger Park, June 6 through July 27.

Everything she does is done with enthusiasm, versatility and vitality — qualities which manifest in all her work, from the oil and watercolor paintings to the metal and stone sculptures, acrylics and Plexiglas oils.

One cannot imagine how this tall, able, always smiling woman, who looks as if she can barely lift a framed painting, can lift huge stones and weld metal. In the fifth of her art, Lane grinned, during a recent visit to this office. "In fact," the lovely lady admitted, "now, it's my hand for me lifting the stones. Still, it doesn't discourage me. I took a stone sculpture course as late as last year, and I've been doing this kind of thing in my home. I have a studio in my house where I work on stone, sculpture and metal. I can't really lift the stones any more. I have some on tables and some on floors, and when relatives or friends visit, I ask them to help me lift the stones. I exhibited my stone pieces at the Metrowest V arts time ago."

Lane served as president of the Lay Committee of Education in Union, as president of the PTA and was a Girl Scout leader in Washington School. She also served as president of the Board of Trustees of Career and Counseling of B'nai B'rith. "I was very involved. I love to be involved," she reiterated.

Lane also is a past president and organizer of the Barnard College Club of Central New Jersey. "Years ago," she explained, "I started studying with Bernice Schacter in Linden. She was doing ceramic sculpture, and before long, I was doing ceramic sculpture. As I continued to study with Bernice, I was doing bigger ceramic sculptures. Then I did metal sculpture with Y in Elizabeth. I attended his classes, which is now known as WestOver. From there, Herb started to teach stone sculpture for several years in the Y in Elizabeth. I attended his classes and then I studied with Leonard Agrona for a few years."

Lane laughed. "When I first started welding, complete with mask and torch, I made a table. 'She nodded.'"

Artists will present second exhibition

The documentary photography of Vergara is in high contrast to the images of Berg, Dorer and Cone. It is a record of urban warhousing and decay. Giuseppe Servidio, Valerie Bucci and Manuel Accornero also address issues of contemporary urban life. "Newark Remains Its Poets" by Cone is a poetry statement, albeit from a quieter time in the history of Newark, which still seems pertinent today. Birmelin employs a wide range of descriptive means, publishing his images to the edge of recognition sometimes so that they may or may not be decoded. Both of his works, "Making Choices — An Embroider" and "Overpass," convey a sense of flux or frenzy; aspects of urban life.

Larjo's landscapes are painted at the edge of the city and are usually centered around industrial parks.

Aljira is open Wednesday through Sunday from noon to 6 p.m. and by appointment. Admission is free.

Benefit set in mansion

The New Jersey State Opera Guild will present a Designer Show House which will be open to the public June 3 through June 10 with the exception of June 6 when the house will be closed.

A champagne reception will be held June 3 from 7 to 10 p.m. The event will benefit the New Jersey State Opera.

The show house is the Fairmount Club, a grand colonial mansion at 214 Springfield Ave., Summit.

Twenty design firms have been invited to decorate spaces to reflect their individual tastes and styles. New trends and approaches will be featured with emphasis on "providing inspiration for rooms both big and small."

Visitors will view a series of interior featuring European and American antiques, one-of-a-kind accessories and floral arrangements.

Exhibitions will be featured by such design firms as those in Millburn-Short Hills — Bloomingdale's, ICA Design International Inc., Rug & Kilim, Lowenstein Inc., The Plated One, Designs Impressions Gallery, Betty Pettazzola Design Studio and Van Duzer Interior Inc. in Summit — Summit Freppero Center, Leslie Cummings-Yala, Alchablah! Representing Summit Antiques Center, — in Maplewood — Nancy Rosen's Wall Art, Bernadette Palladin Interior Design, A.B.I. Designs, Lynn Ernst Interiors and Jerry Ross Floral Designs; in Livingston — Dining in in Chatham — The Best of All Worlds; in Glenview — Jeffrey Brooks Interior Design; in Verona — Coqui Designs; in Long Valley — Loreita G. Stas, IDS, and in Plainfield — Blue Hours for the event are June 3, 5 and 7, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.; June 4, 8 and 9, 10 a.m. to 8 p.m.; and June 10, 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Admission is $7-50. Correction

The article, "Union High student wins top art prize for painting," in the May 20 edition in the Arts and Entertainment section should have stated that Lisa Marie Jehle is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Werner Jehle of Union. Julia Bonaventura is an art teacher at Union High School, and the paintings held by the students in the photograph are works of art which were personally selected by the artist for the photograph.

"Phantom," the lushly romantic, gothic musical by the Tony Award-winning team of Arthur Kopit and Maury Yeston, will be at the Paper Mill Playhouse, Millburn, from Wednesday through July 17. Making its New Jersey premiere, the new musical thriller is based on Gaston Leroux's 1911 novel, "The Phantom of the Opera."

Richard White will star in the title role of the Phantom, "a man horribly disfigured at birth but with a beautiful voice being that that makes him yearn for the unattainable love of a young, aspiring opera singer, whom he befriends and protects."

AIDS benefit set by Linden unit

"If You Loved Me..." a theatrically innovative revue on life with a focus on the issue of AIDS in suburbia, will be presented by Mystic Vision Players of Linden to benefit the Starfish Foundation for Children With AIDS.

The performances will be held on June 11 and June 12 at 8 p.m. at the Edison Intermediate School auditorium, 800 Rahway Ave., Westfield, N.J. The Starfish Foundation for Children With AIDS Inc. is a theater company established to provide a forum for "serious and dedicated young talent to further the actors' creative and artistic goals."

Melinda Paige Stetler, director of "If You Loved Me..." said, "AIDS has dealt the artistic community a terrible blow, and our theater company wanted to do something to raise both awareness and funds. Although there is a great deal of denial about the AIDS epidemic, people must face the reality of this disease. Despite society's bias against HIV and PWAs, AIDS is a disease without prejudice, making itself at home among our children at an alarming rate."

The Starfish Foundation for Children With AIDS Inc. is "dedicated to supporting the work of the AIDS Program at Children's Hospital of New Jersey." CHAP is a unit of the

'Il Trovatore' presented for two nights by FDU

Mark Delavan will sing the role of Count Di Luna in Verdi's "Il Trovatore" tomorrow and Saturday at 8 p.m. in the Droyfus auditorium of Fairleigh Dickinson University, Rutherford campus. Delavan is a member of the Opera at Florham, a professional company in residence at the college.

The company will present a new, fully-staged production of the Verdi masterpiece about a gypsy's relentless quest for revenge in which the passion for a vendetta confronts the passion of love. The cast also will feature Adolfo Del Monte as Manrico, Lucrezia Harrison-Davis as Leonora, Samuel De Palma-Lavy as Ferruccio, Concilia Antonino as Azucena, Diane Jones as Ines and Raymond Blackwell as Ruiz.

Rising in the ranks of young American singers, Delavan has won "unusual critical acclaim" for his "rich, lustrous voice and his dramatic talent." In the few years since his professional debut, he has become a familiar artist with the San Francisco Opera and other West Coast companies.

Delavan has scored a number of awards including an Opera Music Theater International fellowship in 1992 and first place in the Philadelphia Opera Pavarotti International Vocal Competition in 1988.

It was reported that for the first time in opera at Florham's history, the company's performances will be enhanced by the addition of superlatives, which will allow the audience to more easily follow the story. Ticket information can be obtained by calling 201-593-8620.

'Frankenstein' slated for summer
Stageworks/Summit, reportedly the only professional Equity theater company in Union County, in residence at Kent Place School, will return for its eighth season on July 8 with a new production of Mary Shelley's classic horror story, "Frankenstein."

Weichert's sales up

Weichert, Realtors recently reported that sales in April for the nation's largest independent real estate company represented the third best month in the company's history and advanced 17 percent over April of 1992's sales.

Company President James M. Weichert said, "The real estate market in the Northeast is officially in a recovery mode. Pent-up demand by consumers, coupled with extremely desirable interest rates and home prices, has made the spring of 1993 real estate market one to remember."

Weichert also reported that in April the company listed more properties than any other single month except one in the company's long history.

Weichert also added that the number of sales the company is recording is far outpacing the number of new listings on the market. "The market will gradually change from a buyer's to a seller's market," the president said. "In some parts of our market area, the inventory of available homes is declining. Today's very favorable conditions may not last long."

Jersey first quarter home sales 2% over last year's

Existing home sales in the Garden State for first quarter 1993 climbed just over 2 percent over the same quarter last year as low mortgage rates and growing consumer confidence levels offset a major snowstorm and damaging floods which dropped nationwide month-to-month sales for the first time since June 1992, the New Jersey Association of Realtors reported today.

The seasonally adjusted annual rate of 132,600 for January, February and March reflects the second straight quarterly sales increase, and the fourth in the previous five.

"On the face of it, a 2 percent increase appears to have no significance. However, when you consider the weather conditions and the loss of transaction time for real estate professionals, the increase is truly remarkable," said Gene Azzalini, NJAR president. "The spring season, conditions permitting, should be exceptional because mortgage rates will stay low and the latest consumer confidence index is up. Hopefully, New Jersey will see a rebound in employment levels."

"The market by year-end 1993 should see a 3- to 5-percent increase over 1992. We should see a continued stream of first-time buyers and condi-

Appeal incorrect property tax assessments

Are you paying more than your fair share of property taxes? The New Jersey Society of Certified Public Accountants recommends that you take the time to periodically review your property taxes and, if necessary, appeal assessments that you think are out of line. The end result could be tax savings for years to come.

Your property tax represents the assessed value of your home multiplied by the local tax rate. The tax rate is set by law and can't be changed on the basis of an individual complaint. However, you may be able to lower your property tax by questioning the amount of your property assessment.

The assessed value of your home is equal to its fair market value — what the property would sell for — as determined by a municipal assessor, multiplied by its assessment ratio — the percentage of fair market value subject to tax. In most places, assessors will consider sale prices of recent properties in determining the market value for the Clinton administration.

Localities also use different assessment ratios in computing property tax rates, so you need to find out how assessments are made in your community. Some localities use 100 percent of the fair market value of your home in calculating your property tax, while others may use a fraction of the market value in doing the calculation.

Don't forget that your property taxes cover local services, such as the costs for operating schools and libraries. In some instances, increased property taxes may not result from an increase in the market value of your home but rather from increased costs of operating local services.

The sheer amount of information needed to compute your property tax creates the potential for errors. There may be a simple mathematical error, or property values may have declined in your area, or the assessor may have based on the computation on incorrect information about your home.

How do you know if the assessor has accurate information about your home? Go to your local assessor's office and obtain your property report card. If you discover an error on your property report card, you may have a case for appealing your property tax.

Also, be aware that you may be entitled to special exemptions, which should be reflected in your property tax calculations. For example, in some communities, veterans, elderly or blind people, and people with low incomes may be entitled to a tax break.

In making an appeal, it's up to you to prove that your home's assessment is incorrect. If you can show that there is a mathematical error in your property tax calculation or a factual error on your property, such as listing your one-story home as a two-story residence, you should be able to have your assessment lowered in an informal talk with the assessor.

If you can't settle the issue with the assessor, you can appeal your case to the local appeals board, which typically comprises three to five local business people. To make your case for a property tax reduction, you'll need relevant materials such as property maps, photographs of your home and similar ones in the neighborhood, and most importantly, assessments on at least three comparable homes — as well as sale prices of comparable homes that sold recently. If possible, bring a supporting appraisal from a recent mortgage refinancing or home equity loan application.

If you lose your case or still are not
